Leaders Map 5-Point Fight Against Cuts In Farm Bill

Bloc to Demand Restoration of Items Eliminated By Committee

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A farm bloc move to recapture $74,000,000, nearly half of the House Appropriations Committee's drastic slash in the Agriculture budget, will be launched in the House today.

A meeting of farm members to plan the drive was set for this morning by Representative Ferguson (Democrat), of Oklahoma, following a conference with Chairman Jones, of the House Agriculture Committee.

Sharp protests by the House farm bloc coincided with a warning by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to members "attempting to scuttle the farm program" that they will be held responsible by the farmers at the polls.

Cuts Threatening, Wallace Says

Wallace called the cuts "dangerously threatening" to the farmers and declared they will "make known their feelings" in the November elections. He said the farmers not only needed the amounts estimated in the budget but the $225,000,000 for parity payments not included in the budget or House bills.

A five-point program for restoring $74,000,000 of the House committee reductions was prepared by Ferguson and Jones for presentation to farm members this morning. The House will start voting on the bill today. The bloc will carry its fight for restoration to the floor.

Abandoned temporarily was the parity payment item, and the $72,678,812 denied by the committee for farm surplus removal and expansion of the food stamp relief plan. It was pointed out that the latter would be subject to a point of order, and that the parity fight will be resumed in the Senate.

Items Are Listed

Items the bloc will ask the House to restore include:

The $25,000,000 for continuation of the farm tenant program, refused any funds by the committee. (Wallace had declared this program is virtually self-financing).

The $47,975,000 eliminated for sugar act benefits. (Wallace had declared that the processing tax on sugar yields $19,000,000 more than the cost of the sugar program.)

Another $1,000,000 for the Forest Service.

An increase of $126,000 for dry land agriculture experiment stations.

Return of the $500,000 cut in water facility appropriations, which supplies funds for individual water projects on farms.

Jones Opposes Committee

Representative Jones took the House floor yesterday to declare the House Appropriations Committee had aimed "a dagger at the heart of agriculture."

"We are willing to take some cuts," said Jones. "We are for economy, but we don't subscribe to such a program as this. It is a staggering performance to reduce a bill $154,000,000 under the budget and more than $654,000,000 under last year."

President Edward A. O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in a statement, charged the House Appropriations Committee with attempting "to economize at the expense of agriculture."

Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, who will attempt to add funds for parity payments in the Senate, called on the President, and, afterward, asserted that "something will be done."

Gloria Jean Aids Blood Bank; Transfusions Saved Her Life

Gloria Jean, 11-year-old singing starlet of the screen, bought a blood bank party ticket yesterday from Nurse Polly Robison, of Children's Hospital

By Gerald G. Gross

When Gloria Jean, singing starlet of the films, indorsed The Post-WJSV blood bank campaign for Children's Hospital yesterday it was far more than a perfunctory gesture on her part.

"My life was saved by blood transfusions. Isn't that so mother?" said the 11-year-old "baby" of the President's Birthday Ball celebration.

"That's right," replied Mrs. Ferman H. Schoonover, attractive mother of Universal Pictures' latest "find." "Gloria Jean all but died about five years ago when hemorrhages set in after her tonsils and adenoids were removed.

"Three transfusions were necessary to save her life. Gloria Jean certainly is one who realizes the value of blood when it is needed in an emergency. And that goes for all of us Schoonovers," she added, with a smile.

Gloria Jean's close call occurred when the family was living in Scranton, Pa., long before the win-

2 Institutions Called Pitiful By First Lady

She Visits Industrial, Receiving Homes For District; Bondy Pleads 'Helpless'

Inquiry Ordered

CHAIRMAN RANDOLPH of the House District Committee, yesterday ordered investigation of conditions at the Home for the Aged and Infirm, which 'shocked' Mrs. Roosevelt when she visited the institution. Page 5.

Pleads for Funds

By Charles Stofberg
Post Staff Writer

While her denunciation of conditions at the Home for Aged and Infirm reverberated in Congress, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday paid surprise visits to two more District institutions, where she found "pitiful" features.

The Receiving Home for Children she declared to be a place from which "boys and girls eventually graduate to prison." Segregation is impossible, she said, and "it is all wrong to have 18-year-old boys and little boys of 6 in the same place."

Favors Cottage Type

At the Industrial Home School, Mrs. Roosevelt found conditions which convinced her "the personnel . . should be reclassified and perhaps increased to some extent and perhaps the dietary should be improved at least a little."

"I feel that while an institution of this kind should, if possible, be outside the city limits and of cottage type, the staff seems to be doing the best they can to make a good home for the boys and girls there, and giving them as good training as can be had under the circumstances."

After her two visits yesterday, Robert E. Bondy, welfare director, reiterated his "helplessness" to correct conditions without proper appropriations. He maintained, as in the case of the Home for the Aged, that he could do "a much better job" with funds now unavailable.

Shortcomings of the Receiving Home have been pointed out repeatedly by welfare experts brought here to survey child care agencies.

Gives Officials Credit

The percentage of "repeaters" at the Receiving Home, Mrs. Roosevelt said yesterday, 49 per cent for the past two years, shows there is something wrong with our whole system of care for children and our efforts at rehabilitation, because for a great many of those young people it is simply a graduation from the Receiving Home eventually to prison.

"The most pitiful feature of the home seems to me to be the small 'lodgers' who are brought in simply because their families are destitute or in some emergency. They, of course, should be separated from juvenile offenders."

She said officials of the home were "trying to do a good job under very adverse circumstances" and also trying to give the inmates good food.

The Receiving Home, 816 Potomac avenue southeast, originally built for an apartment house, is 10 years old. In the last four years, the Board of Public Welfare has re-

On The North Central Finnish Front, Jan. 31.—Finnish troops now fighting in a major battle near the Kuumo sector, came to grips for the first time today with a part of the Soviet Union's Third Siberian Battalion, of 600 men, around the shores of Lake Saana, east of the village of Rasti.

For several hours they fought in the snow-covered forests. In the end the Finnish command reported between 200 and 300 Russians slain and 30 captured.

These Soviet troops, part of the Red Army's Fifty-fourth Division, arrived recently on the Finnish front after eight weeks of fighting during which soldiers from the Ukraine and other southerly parts of Russia went down before Finns skilled in winter warfare. The Siberian battalions were thought to be prepared for the job.

Well Equipped

They came well armed, trained for winter battle, and dressed, unlike other Soviet troops, in windproof white capes. Today was their first contact with Finnish soldiers.

The fighting was equally heavy in other parts of the Kuumo sector during the morning and afternoon. Headquarters reported that five tanks were destroyed before noon.

But the details of the battle are being withheld for the time being. Nevertheless, the fact that the Third battalion was routed east of Rasti, at a crossroads that has been the Soviet base in this sector for many weeks, indicates that the Finnish army is having some success.

Finnish dispatches said that if the Red army's Fifty-fourth Division and auxiliary forces numbering about 22,000 men are forced back across the frontier, Finnish territory will be cleared of the invaders all the way from the Salla front south to the battlefront northeast of Lake Ladoga.

Russians in Counterdrive

There also was heavy fighting in the Salla front farther north, where fresh Red army forces were reported thrown into action in an effort to counterattack the Finns to the southwest of the village of Salla.

The Red army recently was reported to have moved reinforcements into the Salla sector for what was expected to develop into a strong Soviet offensive.

A dispatch from Svanvik, Norway, reported a strong Russian infantry attack against Finnish positions south of Hoyenjarvi near the Norwegian border had been turned

500,000 Troops Massed in Near East, Carnegie Agents Say, to Cut Off Ukraine And Danube Basin With Aid of Turks

By Joseph Barnes
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Jan. 31.—A possible shift of the spotlight in the present European war to the Mediterranean and southwestern Europe, threatening to involve the Balkan nations and possibly Italy in hostilities, was indicated today by confidential information received in New York by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the endowment, made public reports from correspondents abroad that Britain and France now have 500,000 trained soldiers in the Near East, and that Italy has traded machines against raw materials up to $250,000,000 with the Allies since the war began.

These assertions capped a wave of unofficial reports in the last few days of an Anglo-French plan to strike at Germany in the spring from the southeast.

A synchronized Turkish attack has been predicted into southern Russia. The reports have reached a peak on the eve of the Balkan Entente's meeting this week-end at Belgrade.

The chief question at this meeting, where Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey will be represented, is likely to be the problem of the Allied-German squeeze closing on all the smaller states. Behind each side there is both economic power, used by purchasing agents with bulky checkbooks in every capital of southeastern Europe, and military power, apparent in the steady piling up of armed and mechanized divisions around the rim of central Europe.

Dr. Butler's correspondent reported to him today that "France

Plea to Neutrals

By Raymond Daniell.
Copyright by New York Times

London, Jan. 31.—Prime Minister Chamberlain pleaded with neutrals today to be tolerant if not sympathetic toward the British wartime measures which interfere with their trade. Some of his most pertinent remarks in a luncheon address were directed to the United States.

Describing how the war had forced a revolution of British economic and industrial life, the prime minister emphasized that this as well as his country's economic relations with other nations was dictated by the stress and necessities of war. Once the war has been won, Chamberlain implied, the government hopes to return to a normal domestic and foreign policy.

"Prodigious Results"

As though speaking directly to the United States, which has complained recently at search of mails for neutral countries and at delays to its shipping and curtailment of British purchases of American tobacco, Chamberlain appealed to a nation at peace to see these incidents through the eyes of a country fighting for its life.

The prime minister's words to the neutrals were delivered in connection with his summary of the great changes this country is undergoing and the sacrifices its people are making to win the war which he said was being fought primarily to save the small nations of Europe from recurrent threats of aggression.

No Neutral Ship Sunk

He told of the "prodigious results" of the empire's war effort—more than 1,250,000 men under arms, airplane construction stepped up to a point seven times greater than 1935-36, orders for supplies totaling nearly £200,000,000 ($808,000,000), doubled and in some cases quadrupled gun production and shell output more rapid than that of 1914.

Yet no neutral, he said, "feels itself threatened by this enormous accumulation of power." The might of Britain and France, he emphasized, was directed solely against defeating an enemy which sought to extend its military hegemony over all Europe.

The prime minister said it was for the neutrals to decide whether to enter the war or remain aloof, and also how "they shall use the neutrality they have chosen."

He urged that all such countries whether "small, weak, great or

Committee Halves Navy Building Plans

'Short-Range' Program Of 43 Ships to Cost 670 Million Approved

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The House Naval Committee yesterday gave tentative approval to a $670,000,000 fleet expansion program, designed to add 43 ships and 1,011 warplanes to the Navy in the next two years.

Voting on individual sections of the measure, the group cut the amount recommended by the Navy Department virtually in half, but emphasized it was merely substituting a short-range program for the six-year plan asked by naval chiefs.

82 Ships Provided

Chairman Vinson said construction of all ships in the revised bill would be started in the next two years, and declared that "was all that can be laid down in that time with existing facilities."

Including replacements and ships previously authorized, 82 fighting ships and a considerable number of auxiliaries will be started within the next 24 months under the plans, he added.

Final action on the bill was deferred until next week, to permit representatives of peace societies to appear in opposition, and to obtain a formal recommendation from the White House.

Larger Cruisers Planned

When first presented, the Navy bill called for expenditures of approximately $1,300,000,000 for 77 fighting ships, 31 tenders and other auxiliaries, and 2,395 new planes. The expansion in combatant ships was about 25 per cent.

As tentatively approved yesterday, the measure enlarges combatant tonnage about 10 per cent and plane strength about one-third. In authorizing 167,000 additional tons of warships, the numbers were not fixed, but testimony indicated that three aircraft carriers of about 26,500 tons each, 14 submarines of about 1,500 tons apiece, and prob-

Trade Dislocation In War Inevitable, Japanese Diet Told

By Relman Morin.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Tokyo (Thursday), Feb. 1.—Greeted by silence, Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita summarized Japan's foreign policy at the opening of the Diet today with the declaration there is no intention "to eliminate legitimate rights and interests of the United States and other third powers" in China.

The speech failed to evoke the slightest audible reaction, contrasting sharply with last year, when the Diet broke into wild applause over delineation of Japan's plans to establish a "New Order" in East Asia.

Arita qualified his declaration by saying "it is inevitable that trade and other economic activities of the third powers be affected at times by military operations."

Grew Is Absent

With one notable absence—United States Ambassador Grew—the gallery was packed with foreign diplomats. An attack of bronchitis kept Grew away.

Arita's speech gave no hint of concrete plans, but devoted more attention to relations with the United States than any other single international problem confronting the country.

He merely concluded, however, with the hope that "relations will be restored to a normal status."

Recent abrogation by the United States of its commercial treaty with Japan, leaving trade relations on a day-to-day basis, the dispute with

Light Costs For D.C. Homes Cut $155,000

P.U.C. to Issue New Schedules Today on PEPCO Electric Rates

Residential users of power in Washington will be saved $155,000 on their bills this year under a new rate schedule expected to be ordered today by the Public Utilities Commission.

Last Saturday the commission issued an order lopping $575,029 from rates billed to commercial consumers. Yesterday's proposed new schedule followed a storm of protests from individuals and organizations representing residential users.

Should the new rates, which would be applied to February bills, be adopted at today's meeting of the P. U. C., 27 per cent of the cut would go to residential consumers. Commercial users would be saved $420,000 annually.

At hearings January 24 on the proposed rate reduction, officials of the Potomac Electric Power Co. declared they had $454,786 available for rate reductions. The $575,029 cut ordered by the commission was submitted by George H. Wilson, its chief accountant.

During hearings last week, a dispute developed between Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and District Industrial Union Council, who demanded a "greater allocation" for residential consumers, and Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Building Managers and Owners Association, who asked that the entire cut go to commercial users. S. Schmerler, chairman of the Consumers Conference on High Prices and Profiteering, urged the cut be of residential rates.

Santelmann Succeeds Branson As Leader of Marine Band

The mantle of John Philip Sousa fell upon a 37-year-old Washington musician yesterday.

William F. Santelmann, an announcement from the Navy Department said, has been named leader of the Marine Band. Its second leader since 1935, Santelmann becomes head of a musical organization the roots of which are as old as the Nation, and which has played at practically all great occasions of state in American history.

Son of the late Capt. William Santelmann, leader of the band for nearly three decades, the new leader takes over the baton from the colorful Capt. Taylor Branson, who is retiring. He will be its eighteenth leader and the fourth since Sousa, the "March King," brought the band to immortality in the '80s.

When King George VI and Queen Elizabeth visited Washington, Capt. Branson was ill and on Santelmann fell the burden of the musical arrangements for their stay. He also conducted the band on its last two official tours.

SANTELMANN

Born here February 24, 1902, Santelmann attended Washington schools, graduating from Tech High in 1920. He attended the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston for nearly three years, at the end of which he enlisted as a Marine Corps bandsman.

Serving under his father for four years, he was named principal musician by Capt. Branson in 1934 and second leader the year following. For 10 years, Santelmann was the violin soloist of the band, and concertmaster for its

Byrd Taken for 'Adm. Stork,' Gets Wire for Adm. Stark

By the Associated Press

Far away in Little America Admiral Byrd probably still ponders a congratulatory telegram he received last week from Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the Army, and wonders what it is all about.

This story, as related by a member of the House Military Affairs Committee, was told yesterday by Gen. Marshall while testifying before the committee in executive session.

En route East by plane from recent Army and Navy maneuvers in Southern California, Gen. Marshall thought it fitting to send a message of thanks and congratulations for successful operations to Admiral Harold B. Stark, chief of naval operations.

A ground radio receiver taking the message mistook the letter "A" in Admiral Stark's name for an "O." Somewhere along the line a communications operator concluded that the sender was facetiously addressing Admiral Byrd as "Admiral Stork" and dispatched the message to the Antarctic.

The incident came to light when Gen. Marshall, failing to receive a reply from Admiral Stark, felt something had gone awry and checked up.

Warmer Today as D. C. Hails End of Snowiest January

Warmer weather will bring increasing cloudiness to the Capital today as Washingtonians sighed with relief at the passing of what promises to be the "snowiest" January on record.

Bright sunshine yesterday melted snow on streets, but the slush froze in icy sheets with darkness. Automobile traffic slithered about, crept and stalled in jams until sand was scattered on arterial highways by the Capital Transit Co. and District workers.

The thermometer, which rose from 15 degrees at 8 a. m. to 37 degrees at 4 p. m., will drop again to 13 early this morning, the Weather Bureau said.

Virginia also welcomed the passing of January, coldest in the State's history, although there were no immediate prospects of temperatures high enough to melt the snow blanketing the Old Dominion.

During January, 15.3 inches of snow fell here, 9 inches above the long-term average, the Weather Bureau said. Snow fell 11 days last month, and the white blanket lay on the ground 29 out of the 31 days. It snowed 5.2 inches January 8, .5 of an inch January 19 and 9.5 inches January 24.

The thermometer fell below the 32-degree freezing point 27 days and rose above the icepoint, 12 days,

Dies Group Sees Plan to Halt Inquiry

'Pelley Letters' Were Bought for Purpose, Members Charge

By John B. Oakes

After hearing three witnesses in an all-day secret session, the Dies Committee last night announced that their testimony "conclusively" showed that recently published letters reflecting on Chairman Dies had been obtained for a consideration.

The letters, which were inserted in the Congressional Record by Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, were branded as "forgeries" on Tuesday by David Mayne, who claimed to be their author.

In its statement, the committee declared that yesterday's testimony "corroborated" previous evidence of an attempt to discredit Dies, destroy the effectiveness of the committee, "and, if possible, to prevent the continuance of the committee."

Meanwhile, Representative Hook stated through his secretary that he possessed an affidavit from Mayne that the letters were genuine. The disputed documents, bearing the purported signature of William Dudley Pelley, Silver Shirt leader, carried the inference that Dies and Pelley were working in "collusion."

On the floor of the House, however, Representative Keefe (Republican), of Wisconsin, insisted that the letters were "utter and complete forgeries," and demanded that Hook withdraw them from the Congressional Record before they are expunged by House action.

"The integrity of this House is at stake," cried Keefe, as he urged Hook to apologize for "playing into the hands of a bunch of cheap conspirators." Hook was not on the floor at the time.

The witnesses before the Dies Committee yesterday were Harold Weisberg and Gardner Jackson, alleged collaborators in obtaining the "Pelley letters" from Mayne, and John Mitchell Henshaw, who was said to have introduced Weisberg to Mayne.

The official statement, issued by Acting Chairman Starnes on behalf of the committee, declared that "the testimony of Weisberg and Jackson corroborated the testimony of Mayne to the effect that Weisberg paid to Mayne certain sums of money furnished him by Jackson for the letters which were later given to Mr. Hook and which were used by Congressman Hook in his remarks on January 22."

"The testimony of Weisberg and Jackson also corroborated the testimony given by Mayne that they would assist him in obtaining employment with the Federal Government," the statement continued.

Weisberg and Jackson both told reporters later that they were not convinced that the letters were forgeries. They freely admitted paying Mayne for the documents—"$105, to be exact," said Weisberg. The money, Jackson emphatically declared, came from his own personal funds and not from Labor's Nonpartisan League, of which he is an officer.

President Roosevelt, when asked whether he planned to withdraw the nomination of Paul R. Leake to be collector of customs at San Francisco, replied yesterday that he had not heard a peep about it.

The question was put at a press conference and brought no further comment. Leake's appointment has been opposed before the Senate Judiciary Committee by Senator Downey (Democrat), of California.

Representative Peterson (Democrat), of Florida, yesterday became commander of the Congressional organization of war veterans. The group, which has 188 members, elected Representative Van Zandt (Republican), of Pennsylvania, adjutant, and Representative Walter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, treasurer.

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, urged Postmaster General Farley to make the stamp commemorative of Idaho's 50 years of Statehood a tribute to Senator William E. Borah.

The Idahoan recalled the Postoffice Department already had announced a commemorative stamp would be issued for the State's fiftieth anniversary next July 3.

"The State of Idaho would be proud of a commemorative stamp with the picture of Senator Borah," Clark said.

Chairman Hope (Republican), of Kansas, announced the special Republican House committee studying agricultural problems would hold hearings at Indianapolis on February 9 and 10.

Hope said the hearings would be in charge of Representatives Gillie (Republican), of Indiana, and Landis (Republican), of Indiana, but that all other Republican Congressmen from Indiana would attend.

Eccles to Get Reserve Board Reappointment

President Reveals He Will Retain Utah Banker in Place

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday that he intended to reappoint Marriner S. Eccles as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Eccles' nomination, it is understood, will be sent to the Senate today. His four-year appointment as a member and chairman of the board expires today.

It had been intimated that Eccles, an advocate of aggressive economic control measures by the Federal Government, probably would continue as board chairman without reappointment. The President's announcement, made at a press conference yesterday, indicated, however, that Eccles had agreed to accept reappointment.

He was said to be averse to a new appointment because of a desire to return to the job of managing his banking interests in Utah and adjoining States at the end of the Roosevelt Administration.

Under the Federal Reserve act, if a board member resigns before his term has expired, he is barred for two years thereafter from holding any office, position or employment in any Federal Reserve member bank.

Eccles will be reappointed merely as a member of the board. Then if he is confirmed by the Senate, the President will designate him as chairman. Under the law, he must be designated as chairman for a four-year period.

Board members are appointed for 14-year terms. There is a vacancy on the board that runs for 12 years, but since Eccles would gain nothing by accepting this alternative, it is regarded as doubtful that he will be named for the 12-year vacancy.

Mr. Roosevelt declined to make any comment with regard to the term for which Eccles will be reappointed.

The President apparently vetoed the suggestion that he continue without reappointment. Under the law, board members continue until their successors are named.

Expectation is that, if the President leaves the White House on January 20, 1941, the expiration of his present term, Eccles will give up his Reserve Board post. In that case, he would be barred from taking a position with one of the Eccles-controlled member banks. Presumably, however, the law would not prevent him from assuming general direction of his extensive banking and business interests. The Eccles banks are owned and operated by the First Security Corporation, a bank holding company organized by Eccles.

U.S. Drops Case Against WPA Strike Rioters

Rogge Moves Dismissal Of 125 Facing Trial in Minneapolis Court

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Jan. 31.—On motion of the Government, Federal Judge Joyce dismissed strike conspiracy indictments against 125 Minneapolis WPA workers today.

At the same time five others pleaded nolle contendre, thus throwing themselves on the mercy of the court.

In asking the dismissal, O. John Rogge, chief of the criminal division of the United States Attorney General's office, said that President Roosevelt "felt the duty of the WPA workers had been made clear; that while they may organize like others on the Government pay roll, they have no right to conduct a strike or engage in acts of violence."

Thirty-two defendants already have been convicted and four acquitted. With todays' action, all the conspiracy cases in Minneapolis, growing out of the WPA disorders and strike over wages last July, are completed except for sentencing of those convicted.

Judge Joyce will sentence 17 of the 32 defendants convicted, in addition to the five who pleaded nolle contendre, Saturday. Sentencing of the other 15, of whom 14 are women, has been postponed indefinitely. The fifteenth defendant is now serving a term for parole violation.

"The department feels that the 32 persons most culpable have already been convicted," Rogge's statement said.

Restore Faith Of Business, A.F. of L. Urges

Executive Council Says Government Should Rebuild Confidence

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 31.—Declaring that lack of faith has stunted industrial expansion, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor today called upon President Roosevelt and Congress to "take whatever steps are necessary to restore business confidence."

The council, in demanding an immediate "go" signal for industrial growth, urged that "all Government actions that tend unnecessarily to discourage business expansion cease and that a positive effort be made to encourage greater industrial activity."

Would Know "Rules"

Expression of the council's views was contained in a statement released through President William Green who, at a subsequent press conference, declared that industry "wants to know what is the future policy of the Government."

"It wants to know what are the rules of the game," he said. "In my opinion, a lack of rules of the game has created fear and misunderstandings."

Recommending that efforts to reduce unemployment be "integrated," the labor organization urged creation of a national advisory council on unemployment, composed of representatives of Government, business, labor, farmers and consumers.

Green, at the press conference, said that "unlike others who have harped and criticized" efforts to solve the unemployment problem, "we have offered some constructive remedies."

When asked whom he meant by "others," Green smiled and said a reference to John L. Lewis and his Congress of Industrial Organizations could be "implied."

See 9,000,000 Jobless

Estimating that approximately 9,000,000 persons are out of work, the council instructed officers of the labor federation to "call upon both political parties to incorporate in their platforms this year a constructive program for the elimination of widespread unemployment."

"This is not and must not be considered a partisan or political issue," the council declared. "It is a grave responsibility of every element of our national life."

The council said the labor federation "refused to accept the idea of chronic or permanent unemployment," and added that to do so would be to "admit the failure of democracy."

Before recessing for the day, the council received but took no action on a documentary presentation from a neutral committee reporting inability to reach solution of a 38-year-old teamsters-brewery workers' jurisdictional dispute over the right to organize beer truck drivers. The matter will be considered later by the council.

Miners Refuse Third-Term Indorsement As Lewis Is Authorized to Select Candidate

By E. E. Easterly.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 31.—The United Mine Workers convention shouted praise for President Roosevelt today, but refused to indorse him for a third term.

Forty-seven resolutions urging a third-term indorsement were referred to the union's international executive board for "appropriate action" as "circumstances may warrant."

The convention thus authorized President John L. Lewis and the board to select a Presidential candidate—a "liberal" was specified—who they felt would best serve labor's interests.

The action, supporting Lewis' recommendation that the convention itself make no Presidential indorsement, came after 90 minutes of the loudest and most controversial debate so far in the session.

Only 5 Per Cent Vote "No"

There were booming "yes" and "no" votes, but the U. M. W. president announced the resolutions committee's recommendation was adopted by an "overwhelming" majority. He told newspapermen that not more than 5 per cent of the delegates voted "no."

The committee reported that "the only sensible, sane and proper course" would be to refer the third-term subject to the executive board "for appropriate action and such financial support as circumstances may warrant at the proper time in support of the program that may be agreed upon and worked out in cooperation with labor's Nonpartisan League."

Most of the delegates taking the floor emphasized they favored President Roosevelt. Some expressed regret over Lewis' prediction that a third-term campaign would encounter "ignominous defeat."

Would Name Lewis

One delegate asserted that "if the convention could name a President today, it would name John L. Lewis."

The resolutions committee conceded that the Roosevelt Administration had made headway from 1933 to 1937, but declared the social and economic program of the New Deal had not been consummated.

It said a "coalition clique" in Congress since 1937 "put not only a stop to New Deal legislation but weakened and destroyed many of the New Deal legislative acts."

To win in the 1940 elections, the committee said, "we must have a united party . . ., united on liberal candidates, on liberal principles, and the consummation of New Deal legislative and administrative policies and united with labor . . ."

No national officer of the U. M. W. spoke on the resolution.

The Rev. G. A. Patrick, a Richland, Va., delegate, said he considered it significant that "none of our officers has said he was against President Roosevelt. They are just keeping him guessing."

3,700 to Get First Security Pension Checks

Payments Will Range From $10 to $85, With Average to Be $24

Some 3,700 men and women throughout the United States will receive checks from $10 to $85 today as the first monthly benefit payments under the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, the Social Security Board announced yesterday. The average check will be about $24.

Although 14,000 claims have been approved out of 23,029 received, the number certified to the Treasury for payment was reduced this month, the board pointed out, because many claims were paid in lump sums under the original 1935 social security act. Those claimants will not receive monthly benefits until the lump sums already paid have been absorbed.

The 23,029 claims already received, the board said, represented 18,343 from retiring wage earners; 2,717 from wives of retiring wage earners; 1,446 from dependent children; 6 from widows over 65; 174 from young widows with dependent children; 2 from dependent parents, and 341 for lump-sum death payments.

During the year 940,000 claims are expected to reach Social Security headquarters for examination and certification.

To be eligible for monthly benefits, the claimant must be at least 65 and retired, with an income of less than $15 a month. Reemployment automatically disqualifies a recipient from further participation in the program.

Unable to estimate accurately the number of beneficiaries in Washington, Victor Sadd, board information director, said last night possibly 200 to 250 checks would be distributed here, based on the number of social security accounts.

Calvert Group Backs Radcliffe In Senate Race

Support for Senator George L. Radcliffe in his race for renomination was pledged yesterday by a group of prominent Calvert County Democrats.

In a formal statement the group declared that Radcliff's five year's experience in the Senate, his intimate knowledge of the seafood industry and the active part he has played in promoting the welfare of southern Maryland "fit him to render greater service to the people of Maryland than any other candidate."

The statement was signed by State Senator J. Wilmer Johnson, Delegate Louis L. Goldstein, Judge Robert E. Truett, County Treasurer S. C. Cox, Justice of the Peace Arthur R. King, Evelyn C. Young, register of wills; Chief Judge Alvin T. Buckler, Judge Albert Moreland, Oscar S. Bowen, Roy W. Wood, Dr. J. Weems, president of the Calvert County Medical Society; T. M. Thomas, of Solomons; J. R. Langley, of Solomons; Justice of the Peace G. Rowland Howard, Maury W. Hall, Jonathan M. Gatt, Ernest Denton, Brooke Bond, chairman of the liquor board, and Edwin L. Bowen.

Three Hotel Unions Ask Court Ruling on Contract

Three hotel workers' unions yesterday asked the District Court to hold that their contract with the Continental Hotel was binding on Jack Melrose, Inc., a company which took over the hotel's dining room and kitchen.

Attorneys Samuel Levine and Sidney C. Schlesinger filed the suit for locals of the hotel and restaurant workers, the hotel service workers and the bartenders union, all American Federation of Labor groups.

The union said the unions were certified as employe representatives by the National Labor Relations Board on April 14 last year and on June 30 signed a modified closed shop contract binding the hotel company "and its successors."

However, the complaint said, the Melrose company refused to observe the contract. Levine said the contract affected about 85 workers.

Gene Autry Is a True Cowboy, Washington Resident Insists

Charles MacGregor Gets on High Horse Over Charges That Film Star Doesn't Know How to Mount a Steed

Charles MacGregor, 20, secretary of the Gene Autry Friendship Club, strummed his guitar at his home at 1604 F street northeast yesterday and repeated his claim that Gene Autry is a fine gentleman and a true cowboy and knows the best way to mount a horse.

MacGregor's ire was aroused last Friday when two letters appeared in The Post's "Letters to the Editor" column deriding the cowboy film star's demonstration of the proper mounting technique. His reply was immediate and strongly worded: Only a "sissy" or a critic far behind the times would question Gene's methods, he wrote.

"It's too bad even to speak of that any one should try to wrong such a fine gentleman and as true a cowboy as Gene Autry with such comments as were made," MacGregor complained. "Maybe I was a little too rank in my letter," he said yesterday, "but it's hard to get things down on paper when you feel so strongly."

MacGregor was born to horses on a farm in Stafford, Va. Now he is in charge of the third floor of the Sears Roebuck warehouse. He follows Gene Autry's pictures, plays the guitar in cowboy attire and is active in the Friendship Club.

This organization was founded two years ago by Dorothy Pinnick, of East Gary, Ind. It now has more than 400 members. Fifteen of them live in and near Washington. When Gene came to town for the President's Birthday Ball, they all called on him.

Tuesday night when Gene appeared at the Atlas Theater, MacGregor played the guitar with Blackie and his Gang to accompany Gene's songs. "That was the best fun I ever had, I reckon," he said.

MacGregor has never been west of Chicago, but he hopes to get out on the plains some day. He sent to Denver for his cowboy attire. He learned to play the guitar after listening to Gene's records. He plays every Saturday night over WOL with Blackie and his Gang.

2 Maids Clear Merry Fahrney In Divorce Case

Both Deny Charges of Her Husband's Filipino Houseboy in Testimony

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 31. — Merry Fahrney Cassini's divorce suit against the fourth of her husbands, Count Oleg Cassini, neared an end today with testimony picturing her as a young woman of impeccable conduct who never so much as served a cocktail in her apartment.

Rebutting assertions by the count's witness, Fidel Lukban, a Filipino houseboy, that she had entertained other men in her boudoir, three maids employed by the patent medicine heiress swore that she never had made any material breach in the conventions.

When the first of these, Anita George, declared to counsel "we never served cocktails," Justice Aaron Levy interrupted the proceedings to observe from the bench: "You don't know what you've missed."

Shortly afterward, he took the case under advisement, announcing: "Decision reserved."

"Decision reserved," Merry echoed to one of her lawyers. "What does that do?"

Anita George, the heiress' personal maid, and her two co-workers, housemaids Daisy Little and Edna Adams, all agreed that they never had seen any misconduct and that it never had been necessary to wait up until the early hours for the countess' return to the apartment.

Before testimony ended, Jcstice Levy exonerated Lowell Birrell, a corporation lawyer, from any improper intimacy with Merry.

Birrell's name had been brought in by Lukban, and "L. B." had been mentioned by the count in his answer to the suit. The justice ordered the name stricken from the papers after Birrell had testified that his only relationship to the countess had been a professional one.

Birthday Balls Here Expected to Net $60,000; Nationwide Proceeds Are Put at $2,000,000

The District's six-day celebration of President Roosevelt's birthday is expected to net $60,000 or more for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, it was reported yesterday.

James L. Martin, secretary of the Washington chapter of the foundation, made the estimate after receiving preliminary reports on attendance at Tuesday night's six birthday balls, three midnight shows in theaters, benefit dinner and "gold plate" breakfast.

Washington's 1939 donation came to $54,213.86, the largest sum collected here since the celebrations began in 1934. The figure for 1938 was $41,068.

All Returns Ahead

Martin, who is executive secretary of the Public Utilities Commission, said returns from all events here were running ahead of last year. Receipts from the $7.50-a-plate invitation dinner at the Willard Monday night, a new feature in the birthday festivities, "will represent a clear gain over 1939," he pointed out.

It was unofficially predicted that returns from the whole country would reach $2,000,000. Contributions in 1939 totaled $1,546,702.

Mailbags full of dimes continued to pile up yesterday at the White House, Commissioner George E. Allen, National chairman of the March of Dimes committee, said this year's total might be three or four times greater than the receipts for 1939, which came to $217,000.

While foundation officials cheerfully examined these reports, Washington settled back to normal after a celebration of New Year's Eve dimensions.

No Serious Damage

Special clean-up squads were on duty yesterday in several hotel lobbies and ballrooms. None of the eight hotels that gave birthday parties reported any serious damage, however.

"It was a very nice crowd and everything was well under control," the Raleigh management said. "No damage and we enjoyed having them," was the report from the Hamilton.

R. L. Pollio, manager of the Mayflower, conceded there was "a lot of work to be done" at the hotel yesterday morning, but said he had only "the happiest memories" of a crowd estimated at more than 10,000.

The Stars Depart

Comparatively little fanfare attended the departure from the Capital of 17 screen, stage and radio stars, who contributed their box-office pulling power to the celebration Monday night. Red Skelton remained in Washington to continue his engagement at the Earle Theater, while Edward Everett Horton is playing the lead this week in "Springtime for Henry" at the National Theater.

Olivia de Havilland was given a gay sendoff at the airport by a group that included Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. Thirty Oklahomans entertained Gene Autry at an informal party in the Mayflower before the screen star left by plane. James Cagney and Pat O'Brien boarded a train for New York after a luncheon at Fort Myer.

Postmarks Checked

An exact accounting of the District's 1940 contribution to the fight against infantile paralysis must await full returns from more than 100 distribution points for birthday ball tickets, as well as the foundation audit of proceeds from the March of Dimes.

Postmarks are checked on all gifts in the March of Dimes so that each State and the District can be credited with its share of the total.

Commissioner Allen said it would take his staff of 35 assistants two months to tabulate all the donations.

Thrift Shop Plans Benefit March 6

The annual Thrift Shop benefit ball will be held Wednesday evening, March 6, at the Sulgrave Club, it was announced yesterday. Funds are to be raised for contributions to six Washington children's agencies, Children's Hospital, the Child Welfare Bureau, Columbia Prenatal Clinic, Children's Country Home, Junior League Clinic at Children's Hospital, and St. John's Orphanage.

Chairman of the committee is Mrs. John R. Williams. The Thrift Shop, a non-Community Chest agency, raises funds through the sale of old clothes.

NLRB Opens Defense, Cites Strike Decline

Walkouts Reduced From 4,740 in 1937 To 2,283 in 1939

A sharp reduction in the number of strikes since 1937 is the "most hopeful" sign in the labor picture, Chairman J. Warren Madden of the National Labor Relations Board, told the Smith committee yesterday.

Opening the board's presentation of its side of the case, Madden offered to the committee a stupendous mass of statistics to prove that the board had helped reduce strikes and had maintained impartiality between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

Madden, who spoke chiefly through NLRB General Counsel Charles Fahy, presented to the committee figures showing that there were 2,283 strikes last year, compared with 4,740 in 1937, the year the Supreme Court upheld the Wagner act.

The man who has directed the Labor Board since its origin in 1935 told the committee that the board's work in its first two years had been greatly complicated by insistence of manufacturers' organizations that the Wagner act was unconstitutional.

Labor Fight Presented Problems

Naming the National Association of Manufacturers and the Liberty League in particular, Madden pointed out that their "incitation" had put "enterprises subject to the act in a rebellious mood."

The split between A. F. of L. and C. I. O., said Madden, had presented the board with unforseen problems which "it was required to decide under the terms of the act."

The former Pittsburgh law professor submitted letters in which officers of firms involved in board cases had expressed their approbation of the agency's conduct in various instances.

One of the letters was from John Boettiger, publisher of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer and son-in-law of President Roosevelt, who expressed his "appreciation for the friendly and efficient manner" in which an election was conducted. Boettiger's name previously had entered Smith committee testimony when it was alleged he had severely castigated an action of the board in a private conversation with an NLRB official.

December Strikes at 4-Year Low

According to Madden's figures, the number of strikes last December—105—was the lowest in any month in four years; the number of workers involved—13,000—was the lowest in seven years, and the number of man days lost—375,000—was the lowest in 6¼ years.

Chairman Smith explained, however, that the number of strikes in 1938 and 1939 was higher than in any year (except 1937) since 1921.

Madden replied that union membership had increased threefold over the earlier years, and he reminded the committee that strikes multiply in years of rising business activity. A pickup in business in late 1938 and late 1939 was not accompanied by a proportionate increase in strikes, he said.

"It seems fair to conclude that the maintenance of this low level of strike idleness is due in considerable degree to the operation of the board," commented Madden.

Interpretation Debatable

"I think you and I agree that the interpretation of statistics is debatable," Smith observed.

"Well, the least I insist on is that the act and the board haven't caused strikes, retorted the witness.

—RULE FOR ADD 3 . . . . . .

Dismissal or withdrawal of more than 5,000 complaints against employers was proof "more than 5,000 times" against any charge that the board always finds employers guilty, Madden declared.

The board chairman asserted that there had been "no discrimination whatsoever" between A. F. of L. and C. I. O. in delay in deciding cases.

"In fact," he said, "the A. F. of L. cases were handled more rapidly than the C. I. O. cases." He added that "despite the A. F. of L.'s charge of bias, its proportion of all cases filed with the board actually rose from 35 per cent in 1938 to 43 per cent in 1939."

Cost of transcript of board hearings—an oft-mentioned point of criticism against the NLRB—is less than in some other Government agencies such as the SEC and Board of Tax Appeals, claimed Madden.

The witness told the committee that his figures indicate "roughly a tendency to greater compliance by employers with the act."

Nazi Governor Says Iron Rule Is for Poland's Own Goood

Adds Vanquished Nation Must Recognize Reich's Right to Eliminate Enemies; Calls Atrocity Stories Exaggerated

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Jan. 31.—Germany's way of ruling occupied Poland is in the best interest of the Polish population, but the Poles must recognize greater Germany's right as a warring nation of 80 millions to eliminate enemies on her flank, Arthur Seyss-Inquart, deputy governor of the area, told correspondents today.

Germany's future relation to any such Polish State as may survive will be determined, the Austrian Nazi predicted, by the readiness with which Poles revise their thinking processes and cease to conspire against the Reich.

He decried as "gross exaggerations" claims by the exile Polish government in Paris that 18,000 persons had been executed by the Germans in Poland, but warned that Germans, "fighting the fight of our lives," could not tolerate conditions "which might amount to a stab in the back."

It would benefit the Poles, Seyss-Inquart insisted, if foreign countries would cease inciting the Polish intelligentsia.

Stiff measures often have to be taken with Polish intellectuals, he acknowledged, but the Polish workers and peasants, he said, are easily led.

The Red Cross and Quakers are permitted to function in Poland and have observers on the spot, he related, but Germany insists on controlling their operations.

"It is true," he said, "that we have forbidden Jews at present to ride on express trains. The reason, however, is hygenic. The Jews invariably carried lice and vermin with them, which in turn resulted in the spread of typhus and other diseases."

In Warsaw alone, he contigued, 650,000 vaccinations had been effected, more than ever were made under Polish rule.

Ten thousand tons of grain, he said, were shipped monthly from Germany to Poland to help feed the population, and a bank of issue soon is to be established to regulate the hopeless financial situation.

Seyss-Inquart denied emphatically that Germans had interferred with church life in Poland.

"We recognize that the Pole is deeply religious," he said, "and we have no intention of interfering. Except for the churches ruined by war, all are open. In scattered cases when priests continued chauvinistic agitation from the pulpit we forbade them to preach."

(Sunday the Polish Embassy to the Vatican asserted Germans had made brutal attempts to wipe out the church and declared there had been wide persecution of Catholics.)

Seyss-Inquart said that in the German-occupied area German workers had repaired about 1,000 bridges destroyed by "the Poles," including 190 railway bridges. Polish physicians have been put into public health services, he recounted.

Textile and shoe stores are closed at present, he said, but this is to prevent hoarding and price increases. Inventories are being taken now but after reopening the stores will sell only to those really needing clothing and shoes. The German administration has continued to pay pensions and 100,000 unemployed are receiving doles, he contended.

Seyss-Inquart said it had been necessary to deal sternly with criminals, "of whom there are whole organized bands," but contended this was for the benefit of the Poles themselves.

"Poland is not central Europe," he said, "we had to introduce measures which these primitive people understood."

bers to its bar and the hearing of cases.

Throughout the day in half the States of the Union, delegations of jurists will be making pilgrimages to the graves where 67 justices of the high court are buried.

Representative Sol Bloom (Democrat), of New York, directed the search for the graves. Only a week ago six had not been found, and it was feared that it would be impossible to honor all the deceased justices today.

week-end, however, with discovery of the resting place of Justice Livingston in a vault in the yard of Trinity Church in New York City.

Wreaths will be laid on nine graves in and near Washington. A memorial service is to be held at the grave of Chief Justice William Howard Taft in Arlington Cemetery at 9:30 a. m.

The anniversary observance will open at 8:30 a. m. with a breakfast in the Senate restaurant, to be attended by members of the Senate and House Judiciary committees and a number of Washington attorneys.

At 11:45 a. m. the joint committee for the sesquicentennial will leave the Capitol for the $12,000,000 Vermont marble temple that houses the court. Sergeants at arms of both houses will escort the legislators into the courtroom.

Hatch, Sumners to Speak

The Senate and House, which observed their own 150th anniversary last March, will pay their respects in the regular sessions this afternoon. Speeches will be made by Senator Carl Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, Representative Hatton Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and Representative U. S. Guyer (Republican), of Kansas, ranking minority member of the committee.

Graves of Supreme Court justices in the Capital area, beside that of Chief Justice Taft, are those of Chief Justice Edward Douglas White, Oak Hill Cemetery; Noah H. Swayne, Oak Hill; Oliver Wendell Holmes, Arlington; Bushrod Washington, Mount Vernon; Joseph McKenna, Mount Olivet; John M. Harlan and Stephen J. Field, Rock Creek, and Philip Barbour, Congressional.

The court first met on February 1, 1790, in the Royal Exchange Building, in New York City. Only three of its five members were present. No cases were brought before the court during the first term and it sat only ten days.

The new leader breeds tropical fish and tinkers about his home at 1343 Shepherd street northeast, as a relaxation from his musical career. He married the former Miss Margaret Randall, of Medina, Ohio, whom he met while at the New England Conservatory of Music.

Mrs. Santelmann is a talented musician herself, having taught at National Park Seminary in Forest Glen, Md., and played concerts before their marriage 15 years ago. They have two children, a boy, 13, and a girl, 8, who are also studying music.

Named to succeed him as second leader was Principal Musician Henry Weber. Weber, 45, was born here and educated in local schools. He enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1915, and has been its clarinet soloist for many years.

The oldest military musical organization in the United States, the Marine Band can trace its origin back to 1775, when the enrollment of "fifes and drums" was started in the new Corps of Marines authorized by the Continental Congress.

In 1798, organization of the band was authorized by Congress, and a year later its first leader, William Farr, was directed to establish a band of musicians at Philadelphia, then seat of the Government.

There is a legend which credits the Marine Band as having been originally a group of vagabond Italian musicians shanghaied into the Corps, but the official history of the organization brands this as a canard. Farr, it is said, recruited his men in Philadelphia voluntarily.

In 1800, the band was moved to the banks of the Potomac, and housed in tents on the hill where the Naval Hospital now stands. The first of its many open-air concerts was played August 21, 1800, but its official debut came on New Year's Day, 1801.

President Adams, inaugurating a custom which existed until the present Administration, held a New Year's reception and the new band was a feature of the occasion. Officials said it played at every White House New Year's reception since.

When James Madison was inaugurated in 1809, his celebrated wife, Dolly, decreed a grand ball, with the colorfully dressed and tuneful Marines to play for the dancers. Every Inaugural Ball from this first one to date has heard the band throughout the evening.

Wool Spokesman Asks End of Pacts; Lumber Group Urges Changes

By the Associated Press

A Democratic Senator joined two Republican members of the House last night in expressing opposition to renewal of the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements program in its present form.

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado; Representative Mundt (Republican), of South Dakota, and Representative Angell (Republican), of Oregon, expressed their opposition in a radio program under the auspices of the American Good Government Society.

Earlier a representative of the lumber industry proposed continuation with restrictions of the reciprocal trade program while a spokesman for wool-manufacturing interests demanded its abandonment.

Adams Explains Stand

Both appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee among a group of witnesses who attacked and defended the program, which is to expire this year unless renewed by Congress.

"My criticism," Senator Adams said on the radio, "is not of those who administer the law but of the law itself which takes from the elected representatives of the voters their constitutional duty and powers and makes one man (the President) an absolute dictator of the economic welfare of American agriculture and of almost every import industry."

Mundt asserted that the program had discriminated against American farmers, ranchers, laborers and businessmen by giving foreigners the benefits of our tariff reductions and permitting them to drive American products from the market because of cheap sweatshop products from foreign farms and factories."

Angell Cites Competition

Angell said:

"We not, however, feel that in justice to American citizens we should adopt a free trade program with respect to any major products of our own country that will stifle American production, throw American laborers out of work and trade off American markets, with no compensating returns."

Wilson Compton, secretary and manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, while recommending four major changes, told the Ways and Means Committee the "program should be carried on, not abandoned in midocean."

Arthur Besse, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, asserted that the Nation had been "flooded with a stream of propaganda designed to sell the country on the reciprocal trade agreements program."

Compton Offers Program

"I appreciate the importance of disposing of surplus products; I hope we may soon have world peace, but I am convinced that the trade agreements program is not the means of accomplishing either," he said.

Compton proposed that the authority to make concessions should be restricted to reductions in tariff rates and to import quota determinations; not include the power to "bind" or "freeze" a commodity on the free list; that whatever tariff rates are fixed be subject to the so-called "flexible" provisions of the tariff act of 1930; that publication of all proposed concessions be made for a period of perhaps 60 days before they become binding.

White House Parley Held On Liberalism

1940 Course Hinted After Talk With Littell, Dimock and Chapman

President Roosevelt indicated yesterday that he was considering plans for promoting the cause of liberalism in the 1940 campaign.

Asked at his press conference about a highly secret conference last Friday with three Administration officials, he said the subject under discussion was liberal principles.

The officials were Norman H. Littell, Assistant Attorney General; Marshall E. Dimock, Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, and Oscar L. Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior. Littell and Dimock were accused by John L. Lewis last October of planning a conference of Western Progressives to launch a third-term boom.

Mr. Roosevelt declined, in response to questions, to discuss the nature of the conference, except to emphasize that liberal principles were considered.

Farley a Visitor

The idea of a national conference of progressives, it is understood, has not been abandoned. There is still talk of calling such a conference in an attempt to draft a liberal platform for the coming campaign.

Meanwhile, Postmaster General Farley called at the White House for lunch and spent an hour in a private chat with the President. It was the first conference between the two since Farley, in a speech in Winston-Salem, N. C., said he would place the interests of his country above those of his party if they should ever clash.

This remark was interpreted by some observers as an antithird term declaration. Reporters who asked Farley about the third term question, however, got nothing more than a broad grin.

Farley brushed aside questions as to what he had talked with the President about. He reminded reporters the Democratic National Committee would meet here Monday to select the date and city for the National convention.

The President at his press conference again parried good-humoredly questions concerning his attitude toward a third term. Asked if he thought the birthday balls for infantile paralysis sufferers would be called next year, he told the reporter asking the question that he must have been up all night the night before.

Asked about a report that Farley would resign, and would be succeeded by Senator Mead, New York Democrat, he laughingly replied that this was a brand-new rumor.

He said members of the Democratic National Committee would call at the White House Tuesday just to shake hands. He would have no message to communicate to them, he said.

quested sums ranging from $100,000 to $213,000 with which to build a new home. Each year, however, the Commissioners have seen fit to delete the item from the budget.

$175,000 Not Approved

For the 1941 fiscal year, the board requested $175,000 for a site and new building, but the Commissioners did not approve the item.

Both Dorothy Henry, child welfare consultant from Leveland and Jacob Kepecs, Chicago expert, who studied the local child care agencies, recommended a new receiving home.

New Home Urged

Miss Henry, who was brought here by the Children's Bureau, made a comprehensive study at the Receiving Home and arrived at the following conclusions:

That appropriation be requested for a new home, to house 60 children, and to be built in a convenient location.

That dependent and other children presenting minor behavior problems be placed in suitable temporary boarding homes.

That expansion of playground and gymnasium activities be considerably increased by adequate provision in new building.

Greater development of interests for the children within the home—such as art, drawing, group singing and entertainment.

That careful intake services be set up in the Receiving Home under the general superintendent of Children's Services, to obtain facts about children brought in and to offer protective services for potential delinquents.

Promises Recommendation

In this latter connection, Bondy yesterday pointed out that he would soon recommend a person for this job. His title would be chief consultant of child welfare, and the funds for the job would come from the $12,000 which is annually allowed the District for child demonstration work by the Children's Bureau.

The new setup is designed to coordinate all child-care activities under a single head. The proposed chief consultant would be manager of the five child-care institutions under the Board of Public Welfare, and would be responsible for a comprehensive child-care program.

The results of Miss Henry's survey were reported in September, 1938, and that of Kepecs in March, 1939. Although Kepecs did not elaborate on the Receiving Home, he did recommend a new home and also centralization of control of all child-care agencies under one head.

List of Institutions

The five child-care institutions are Receiving Home, National Training School for Girls, District Training School (Laurel, Md.), Industrial Home School for White Children on Wisconsin avenue, which was visited by Mrs. Roosevelt, and the Industrial Home School for Colored Children at Blue Plains, D. C.

Superintendents of the two institutions visited yesterday by Mrs. Roosevelt have in their annual reports called for expansion of their plants and for better programs to care for their wards.

some star of "The Underpup" and the forthcoming "If I Had My Way," with Bing Crosby, was called to Hollywood. Today she is a healthy youngster who enjoys her dolls and chums, as well as her work before the cameras.

"I hope the card parties for the blood bank are a great big success," said Gloria Jean, as she bought a ticket from Miss Polly Robison of the Children's Hospital nursing staff.

Gloria Jean wanted to visit the blood bank before she, her mother and "Uncle Charlie" (Charles Previn, her musical director) entrained for California at 5 p. m. A slight indisposition, resulting from her "dissipation" the night before, made the trip inadvisable.

"It was about 2 a. m., the latest she ever stayed up in her life, when she finally got to bed, after making the rounds of the hotels, and she woke up this morning with a nervous somach," a member of her party explained.

Gloria Jean is the second-eldest of four daughters. Her 9-year-old sister is her "stand-in" at the studio. She has been singing since she was 15 months old, but had her first vocal lesson about seven months before she left for Hollywood in December, 1938.

Only a handful of hospitals have blood banks when Gloria Jean had her transfusions. Her transfusions were administered by the conventional special donor method. Since then, however, Children's and scores of other hospitals throughout the country have introduced the "bank" system, which obviates emergency calls for donors.

The series of card and game parties, proceeds from which will be turned over to the Children's Hospital blood bank and serum bank fund, will begin next week and continue through St. Valentine's Day.

The latest benefit to be announced is a luncheon and mah jong party February 9 at the home of Mrs. Herman W. Hertzberg, president of the Argo Lodge, B'nai B'rith, women's auxiliary. Mrs. Alex Rosenblum will be chairman on arrangements.

A check for $5, payable to the blood bank fund, was received yesterday from Mrs. Sidney L. Hechinger.

Inquiry Called On Aged Home At Blue Plains

Randolph Orders House Subcommittee To Study Conditions

A House subcommittee investigation of conditions at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains was ordered yesterday by Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee as an aftermath of a visit made to the institution by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, who on Tuesday introduced a resolution asking for such an inquiry, was designated acting chairman of the subcommittee on public health, hospitals and charities after Representative Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, had stepped aside for him.

Randolph said he would invite Mrs. Roosevelt to appear before the subcommittee or to submit a statement, if she preferred, on her observations at Blue Plains.

Should she accept the invitation it would be the first time a President's wife appeared as a witness before a Congregessional committee.

D'Alesandro said he would confer with other members of the subcommittee and schedule hearings as soon as possible. He predicted that the members would make a personal inspection of the home.

The District Commissioners and public welfare officials will be the first principal witnesses to be called, it is expected, to explain why the Blue Plains inmates are poorly housed and the institution is inadequately staffed.

D'Alesandro, a new member of the House District Committee, will be assisted in the inquiry by Representatives Bates, of Kentucky; Schulte, of Indiana; Tenerowicz, of Michigan, all Democrats, and Shafer, of Michigan, and Sandager, of Rhode Island, Republicans.

Navy Program Cut to 43 Ships

ably four cruisers averaging 16,600 tons will be built.

The size of the cruisers planned was withheld, but officials said that ships "somewhat" larger than the present 10,000-tonners are planned. There was some discussion during the hearings of cruisers as large as 27,000 tons carrying 12 or 14 guns.

Seventy-five thousand tons of auxiliaries—approximately 22 ships—would be authorized by the bill. Originally an increase of 125,000 tons was asked. The additional 1,011 planes will bring the Navy to a strength of 4,500, instead of 6,000 proposed by the Navy.

Vinson estimated the cost of the program as follows: Fighting ships, $373,750,000; auxiliaries, $174,000,000; planes, $99,152,274; increased shipyard facilities, $24,000,000.

In curtailing the Navy's proposals, the committee refused to indorse a plan for ordering ships by negotiated contracts instead of competitive bidding and amended the bill to provide the usual labor restrictions and guarantees for division of construction equally between private and Government yards.

Three Docks in Program

Three giant new building docks, capable of taking the largest battleships contemplated, are provided under another amendment. They would be built at Norfolk, Philadelphia and Portsmouth, N. H.

Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, appeared briefly for testimony on the plane reduction. He said that a minimum of 4,500 planes instead of 4,000 as earlier voted under a two-year program would care for present needs. The other 400 craft will not be required for training reserves for about four years, he said.

Another amendment voted cut the number of blimps provided from 26 to 4, fixing the total at 12.

D. C. Girl Wins Essay Prize In National Youth Magazine

To Jeanne Bigham, 16, writing comes naturally. Yesterday she learned she had won another essay prize

Jeanne Bigham Gets Second Award in A Year and Hopes Third Will Be Won; Writing Is Natural, Her Mother Says

Jeanne Bigham, 16, of 4515 New Hampshire avenue northwest, learned yesterday she had won third prize in the monthly high school essay contest sponsored by Youth Today magazine. It was her second essay prize in a year, and she hopes there will be another soon.

Writing comes naturally to Jeanne, or so her mother says. Her mother, Mrs. Helen Bigham, is a linotype operator for the Government Printing Office. She has written many articles in her day and "when the children are grown up" she'll have time for more.

Her father, Milledge Bigham, who died when she was 8 months old, used to write. Her aunt, Madge Bigham, of Atlanta, is the author of "Sunny Elephant" and a dozen other children's books.

Jeanne was allowed any topic she chose for her essay, so she wrote an open letter to a 17-year-old boy. The unnamed model for her story was her brother, James, who is 18 now but took a lot of observation from his sister when he was 17.

The letter is soon to be published by Youth Today. Jeanne was awarded $5. Last year she took second prize in the planetarium essay contest, and she has just entered an essay on "Catholicism" in a national contest sponsored by the Progressive Aids to Catholic Education Society.

"But I haven't heard the results of that," she said. "These things take so long—the waiting nearly kills me." If she wins, a cup will go to her school, the Holy Cross Academy, and she will receive a medal.

Jeanne is in her junior year at Holy Cross, on a scholarship won at St. Michael's School in Silver Spring, Md.

Jeanne began her prize-winning career when 8 with an adventure story that was published in a newspaper. In the third grade at Nativity School she won an American Legion contest with an essay on the life of George Washington.

Only one thing troubles Jeanne, she isn't any good at writing fiction. "I never have any ideas for plots," she said. "Mother gives me some, but they never seem to work."

Indianapolis Leader Faces Fraud Charges

Four Others Accused Of Defrauding U. S. in WPA Expenditures

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, Jan. 31.—A Federal drive to clean up alleged WPA "dirt" in Indiana—marked already by the conviction of eight persons, including a former Mayor of Kokomo—brought indictment today of Arthur V. Brown, president of two Indianapolis banks and a leader in civic affairs, and four other persons.

The latest set of indictments, District Attorney Val Nolan said, is based on the building of drives and streets through private property. Accused with Brown are Miss Elizabeth C. Claypool, Indianapolis clubwoman and member of a widely known family; Carl F. Kortepeter, former county WPA coordinator; Arthur F. Eickhoff, real estate owner, and Charles E. Jefferson, former member of the county flood control board.

Fraud Conspiracy Charged

The charge is conspiracy to defraud the Government through diversion of WPA labor and money. The possible penalty is two years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Brown, who posted $5,000 bond shortly after the indictment were returned, said:

"My attorneys say there is no violation of the law, and I know I had no intention to violate any law."

Kortepeter, with his father-in-law, G. G. Derbyshire, was convicted last December of a similar charge in connection with a road project through land owned by Derbyshire. He is free on $5,000 appeal bond.

Six Others Convicted

At that time Nolan said he wasn't going to stop until he had cleaned up all WPA "dirt" in his district. Before that, Nolan had won conviction of former Mayor Olin R. Holt of Kokomo and five others on a similar charge.

The district attorney said today he had no further WPA evidence for grand jury action at this time. Nolan said the WPA's investigators gathered the evidence on which the indictments were based.

Secretary Wallace said at a press conference that he was "not interested in the slightest" in running for Governor of Iowa, his home State.

Bata Ordered to Drop 53 Imported Workers

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

An order of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, effective today, will deliver a sharp setback to the American fortunes of the world-wide Bata shoe empire. The order requires that some 53 Czech workmen, brought over to "instruct" Maryland high school graduates in shoemaking, sever their connections with the company.

The history of the Bata concern's production in this country is as brief as it is controversial. The half-year activities of its relatively small factory in Belcamp, Md., have already involved several members of Congress, the Labor, State and Justice departments and threaten to entangle the National Labor Relations Board, the Wage-Hour Division, and the Social Security Board as well.

The Immigration Service order had the effect of revoking a permit granted last summer to allow 100 Czech workers to enter this country and serve as "instructors" at the Belcamp factory. Some 78 have entered; 15 were reclassified as being professional or managerial in function and 10 were permitted to continue their employment. The remainder must cease work today.

The order was issued after the United Shoe Workers, a C. I. O. union, protested that the importation of the instructors was a dodge to avoid unionization of the plant. Unemployed and experienced American shoe workers could have been hired, or could have served as instructors, the union said.

Fear that American instructors would have "talked union" to the young employes hired by the Bata Co. was the reason for the Czechs being brought in, the union claimed, and discounted the explanation given by Dr. Jan Bata, head of the firm, that his processes were unique and were known only by his former employes.

Findings of a subsequent Immigration Service investigation were that only one or two of the processes were unique and that only ten Czech instructors were needed.

Bata's counsel here served notice yesterday that he would ask for hearings on the ruling, and intimated that if the matter was not settled satisfactorily, appeal would be taken to the courts.

Meantime, Representative Stefan (Republican), of Nebraska, came to Bata's defense Tuesday on the House floor. In the course of his speech he admitted that Bata had seen him on "the possibility of opening a factory" in Nebraska. Commissioner of Immigration Houghteling, however, asserted yesterday that Bata had assured him not less than a week ago that he had no intention of establishing any more factories in this country.

Houghteling indicated that he had heard "all there was to say on both sides of the question" and saw no prospect of rescinding his order.

Cardenas Bars Arbitration on Foreign Oil

Mexican Valuation 'Can Not Be Changed,' President Asserts

By the Associated Press

Mexico City, Jan. 31.—President Lazaro Cardenas today ruled out the possibility of international arbitration of Mexico's expropriation of the foreign oil industry.

In an interview, Cardenas declared valuations being placed upon the expropriated properties by Mexican courts "cannot be changed."

Cardenas said representatives of the 17 British, American and Netherlands companies affected by his expropriation order of March 18, 1938, had refused "repeated and frequent requests to participate in valuation of the properties."

The companies have valued their seized properties as high as $400,000,000; the Mexican government says the value is considerably less than that.

Asked if the new tanker fleet which Mexico is acquiring would be used to carry oil to warring and neutral European as well as Japan and other Asiatic countries, Cardenas said the government had no plans for supplying any particular country.

In response to a query whether Mexico had protested the Allied blockade of Germany, he said that "this matter is being studied."

"The Mexican government made some proposals to France, with satisfactory results, to avoid disrupting shipment of merchandise which we acquired before the war in Germany as well as other parts of Europe," he added. "Such merchandise already is in Mexico."

Regarding the adequacy of the naval forces of the Americas to enforce their neutrality "safety" zone, he said:

"We should think of the moral force of the nations of the American continent rather than their naval force."

In the event the Americas decided they could help the cause of peace by suspending all sales to warring nations, he asserted, "Mexico would surely be disposed to lend its collaboration."

He approved private support for Finland but expressed belief joint action of neutral nations toward seeking peaceful solution of the Russian-Finnish conflict would be "more efficient" than material aid to the Finns by these nations.

and England have concentrated 500,000 men in the Near East, so as to be near Egypt, the Arabian states, Turkey and Rumania, if necessary, without a single important incident having taken place at sea."

Most of these men must have traveled through waters which the Italians regard more than ever as "mare nostrum," but without even mention having been made of their transport in the Italian press.

The French forces are believed to be concentrated in Syria, under Gen. Maxime Weygand. There have been unconfirmed reports that French soldiers, estimated as high as 500,000 men, are now stationed at Smyrna, Turkish port on the threshold of Europe's back door. Gen. Weygand himself is curtently in Turkey, talking to Marshal Fevsi Cakmack, chief of the Turkish army.

The British troops in the Mediterranean region are understood to be mainly in Palestine and in Egypt, while warships of the British navy and squadrons of the Royal Air Force, as well as powerful mechanized units of the army, are stationed in that area, ready for possible immediate action.

How many Allied troops are already in the Near East is anybody's guess. In Paris this week a Soviet charge that they number 400,000 men was called "manifestly exaggerated," but the number was admitted to be large. An American seaman, who returned this week from a trip which touched at Syria was quoted as saying that 1,000,000 soldiers were expected to arrive there. Now Dr. Butler's informant has set the figure at 500,000.

The transport of these men is believed in some shipping circles to be the chief reason for France's low losses in recent months of submarine warfare. French shipping, it is asserted, has been withdrawn from the Atlantic and concentrated in the Mediterranean as troop convoys.

The strategy behind this move, according to some reports, is a plan for a two-pronged stab toward Germany and the Soviet Union, possibly scheduled for this spring.

An Allied army could conceivably move north around the western end of the Black Sea through Bulgaria into Rumania, cutting German access to the wheat and oil of the lower Danube, while a Turkish army, moving north at the other end of the Black Sea, would strike at the Soviet oilfields at Baku.

If the prongs could be made to meet they would cut off Odessa and the Ukraine, once the bread basket of Europe and now believed by the Allies to be a potential bread basket for Germany.

The factors which would make such a plan attractive to Allied strategists are in large part those which led Winston Churchill to try the Salonika and Dardanelles expeditions in the World War.

powerful," remember that while British measures may cause inconvenience they have not yet resulted in the loss of a single ship or sacrifice of a neutral life, while the enemy seems callous to the "ordinary dictates of common humanity."

He added:

"To us these considerations seem a great deal more serious than any temporary disturbance of trade."

Recognizing that disruption of trade may be serious to the neutrals, Chamberlain continued:

"We have been in the past the largest customer of the United States for agricultural produce. Since the war began we have been compelled to curtail the import of things unessential to us in order that we might concentrate our dollar resources upon the purchase from the United States of those enormous purchases of munitions and equipment it is necessary for us to have in order to carry on our struggle.

"But don't let anyone suppose that we want to use these measures that we've taken for any purpose other than prosecution of the war or that we are indifferent to the losses which the neutrals must sustain."

Refers to Hull Pact

Chamberlain made clear that whatever changes the war had forced in trade relations with the United States were of a temporary nature. This came in his reference to the Anglo-American Trade Treaty negotiated last year.

Under that agreement, while the concessions of the United Kingdom covered a large number of relatively small trades, except textiles and whisky, the concessions of the United States were concerned chiefly with bulk commodities.

United Kingdom exports to the United States consist mostly of manufactured goods while United States exports to Britain consist to a large extent of raw materials like cotton, petroleum, unmanufactured tobacco, timber and pelts.

Opposes Autarchy

Chamberlain stressed the British desire to assist in all possible ways the terminating of the "vicious policy of economic nationalism and autarchy which did so much to upset the last great peace settlement." He recognized, he said, that for full development of international trade it must flow along "multilateral channels."

He added:

"We made an agreement a little over a year ago which we thought at the time pointed the way to better things in international trade.

"It was the very negation of a too-prevalent system of bilateralism, exclusive advantages and discrimination which has been carried to a pitch which clogs the wheels of commerce and which promotes ill feeling among nations.

"It was based on the principle of the most favored nation which in our view in normal times was the best way of promoting international trade.

"And we mean when this war is successfully concluded to return to that idea."

Arita Disclaims Closed China Aim

Britain over seizure of German seamen from a Japanese liner, and problems of European wars gave to the Diet and air of grave expectancy as Arita arose to deliver the foreign minister's annual address.

Arita, however, spoke in a flat monotone, unrelieved by emphasis, color or dramatics as he touched upon expiration last Friday of the Treaty of 1911 with the United States.

Referring to this treaty as "a pledge of friendship between Japan and America," Arita said the reason for its denunciation "is believed to be that by so doing it would serve in the solution of various questions which have arisen between Japan and America in connection with the China affair"—the Japanese-Chinese war.

Stressing that it is Japan's policy regarding other powers in China "to invite their active participation in construction of the new order in East Asia," Arita said nevertheless that military operations "being conducted on so vast a scale" must necessarily have an effect on third power activities.

"In these circumstances," he said, "our Government has resorted to all possible means to protect the rights and interests of the third powers while our military forces have frequently endured even strategic disadvantages on that account.

"I firmly believe that with the establishment and development of the new order, America will come to learn the absence of a desire on our part for either exclusion or monopoly in both economic and commercial fields."

Arita said relations with Germany and Italy "have grown increasingly cordial ever since the conclusion of the anti-commintern agreement." He said "our policy of defense against the Comintern (the Communist International) remains unaltered."

Relations with Russia are "better," he said, with trade and boundary problems being negotiated.

(Foreign Office Spokesman Suma announced yesterday that the Japanese-Russian boundary commission had disbanded because of inability to agree.)

As for the European war, Arita said "drastic changes" would be brought about in Europe which probably would have a "tremendous" effect on "the China affair and the stabilization of East Asia."

"International peace fails to be maintained for various reasons," said Arita. "But after all, is this not largely due to the fact that some nations insist upon trying to maintain an irrational and unjust international status quo relative to race, religion, territory, resources, trade, immigration and other matters by adopting exclusionist policies or by abusing their superior positions?"

Senate Group Delays Action On Finn Aid

Jones Says No Loans Will Be Made Unless Repayment Is Probable

Federal Loan Administrator Jones yesterday told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he will make no loans to Finland or any other government or agency unless there is "reasonable" expectation of repayment.

Jones' statement that he will stand on the Export-Import Bank's "commercial loan" policy spiked any prospect of military aid or outright "gift" to Finland even if Congress approves a $100,000,000 increase in the bank's lending authorization.

The committee deferred action on doubling the bank's lending power, previously approved 18 to 2 by the Senate Banking Committee. Counselor R. Walton Moore, of the State Department, and Green H. Hackworth, legal advisor to Secretary Hull, will follow Jones before the committee today.

Influential Senators on both sides of the Finnish loan issue indicated there would be no "pigeonholing" of the measure, and that a bill, regardless of how it is amended, will be reported to the Senate. This would give the Senate an opportunity to debate the issue.

In a full afternoon's testimony in a closed committeeroom, Jones said:

That the RFC is in a position to return $200,000,000 to the Treasury of the $700,000,000 President Roosevelt said he can recapture from Government corporations.

That the RFC can supply the Export-Import Bank with the $100,000,000 for its expanded loan program without disturbing the President's budget plan.

That the Export-Import Bank has never made loans to war-debt defaulting nations and will not do so in the future, nor will it depart from the commercial bank-loan standards already set up.

That in his opinion the first $10,000,000 credited to Finland by the bank will be repaid, and that he would recommend further nonmilitary loans on application only if he thinks the money will be paid back.

That the bank needs the full $100,000,000 asked for its trade-loan program, and that the bill's $30,000,000 limitation on loans to one country is unneeded as there is no likelihood that credits in excess will be granted one borrower.

The Federal Loan administrator conceded that food and purely civilian supplies purchased here for Finland on Export-Import Bank credit might be traded by the Finns to other nations for military supplies or might free funds for that purpose in Finland.

He said the United States can "police" the transaction only through delivery of the goods at the docks in this country and cannot follow the goods through to their final destination.

Committeemen discovered a technical loophole in the pending bill as now drafted which theoretically would permit more than one $30,000,000 loan to separate agencies of the same nation. While Jones said he would strictly construe the limitation, the committee is expected to rewrite this language.

Other more rigid restrictions are expected to be proposed by opponents of the legislation, including a proposal to prohibit a loan to any nation at war, which would prohibit aid to Finland.

into a rout today by a Finnish counterassault.

Hoyenjarvi, southernmost point of the Russians' projected drive down through Finland's narrow Arctic corridor, is about 55 miles below the Arctic seacoast.

The Finns, taken by surprise, retreated from advance positions and fell back to their main line, where they beat off the Russians and then, reorganizing their forces, counter-attacked and drove the Russians back to their former positions just north of Hoyenjarvi.

Bombs Kill 15

Rovaniemi, Jan. 31 (AP).—Fifteen persons were killed and about 60 injured when 27 Russian bombers came over this important northern Finnish town in three waves today and dropped 150 bombs.

Among the dead were seven small children and three women.

The bombers came over in three groups of nine each and the air raid alarm lasted for two hours.

Five of the children were killed in one building when a bomb struck a cellar door and tore out an entire wall. Two women in the building escaped injury.

Five persons, including two nurses and a woman who was about to give birth to a baby, were killed when some of the bombs struck a hospital.

Pitkarnita Retaken

Helsinki, Jan. 31 (AP).—Finnish troops tonight completed the encirclement of trapped Russian divisions in the Kitela sector northeast of Lake Ladoga by capturing the strategic town of Pitkaranta, front observers reported, and threw back Red army attacks "everywhere" along the same front.

[The New York Times said at least six Russian divisions are reputed in the field at Aittojoki, Kollaanjoki and Kitela, but the last nine days of continued, violent offensive has considerably thinned the numbers.

[It is generally believed that between ten and twelve thousand Russian soldiers have been killed. The Finnish losses during the same period, however, have been relatively light, since in every instance the Russians have been the attackers.—Editor's note.]

Only their numerically inferior forces are keeping the Finns from polishing off the trapped Russians, said the account of the capture of Pitkaranta, which is about 20 miles from the Russian border and one of the Soviet's early objectives in the war.

Allied Troops Set Stage of Balkan Parley

Nations to East of Germany Feel She Is Already Beaten

By Tania Long

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc

London, Jan. 31.—With the stage nearly set for the annual meeting Friday of the four powers of the Balkan Entente—Yugoslavia, Rumania, Greece and Turkey—increased emphasis is being placed in London on the diplomatic importance of the large Allied forces which have been gathering for some months in the eastern Mediterranean area.

The existence of these tropos—which constitute already an embryo of the alternative front whcih the Allies may at any time have to establish in this other part of the world—will be one of the few factors, it is hoped, to stand out clearly against the confused nad complicated array of problems facing the four foreign ministers at Belgrade.

Bulgarian Pledge Reported

Meanwhile, persistent reports circulated in London today that Bulgaria, the other Balkan country against which the four powers originally united with the formation of the Entente, had given Turkey an undertaking that she would not attack Rumania in the event fo either a German or a Russian aggression against that nation. Bulgaria, which has long made claims on the Dobrudja region of Rumania, has always had the full support of Russia on the matter.

These reports, if true, constitute a favorable omen regarding the chances of an at least temporary understanding between the nations of southeastern Europe.

However, the serious turn in the relations between Rumania and the Allies on the question of increased Rumanian oil sales to Germany has more than dissipated any feeling of optimism existing here. In addition to a joint protest in the form of Allied "inquiries" it is understood on good authority that Britain and France have put a sudden stop to the dispatch of certain supplies—including arms—to Rumania.

Turkey Concerned

Although official quarters here continue to maintain a discreet silence as to exactly what they think of Rumania for her apparent rapprochement with the Reich, it is clear that the present controversy is not to be ironed out easily.

It is felt here that Rumania has been playing an extremely dangerous game. One theory to explain her move closer to Germany is that she is attempting to frighten Turkey into offering to guarantee her against aggression. Turkey is concerned by the possibility of the development of a German-Rumanian "friendship," it is said, and might be willing to "buy" back Rumania for the price of a guarantee.

Italy Suspends Oil Orders

By Anne O'Hare McCormick.

Copyright by New York Times

Bucharest, Jan. 31.—Italy, which has been buying nearly 20 per cent of Rumania's oil exports, yesterday suspended a large proportion of her orders pending new arrangements with the government regarding a ratio between cash payments and payment in goods.

The event marks a turn in one of the most dramatic engagements in the European war. Competition between the Allies and Germany over Rumanian oil has pushed up prices too far for other countries to meet, even under a clearing system.

When the trade treaty giving the Reich 45 per cent of the petroleum exports was signed in Bucharest last March, it was hotly resented by the Rumanians as a surrender to German pressure. Now the resentment extends to the British, as well, despite the almost universal popular sentiment that exists here for the allied cause. The British have lost sympathy by their open efforts to control the oil market. If the Rumanians were not convinced that Germany has already lost the war—and this conviction prevails in all the countries east of the Reich—they would take strong measures against British intervention.

12 Die as Nazis Destroy Three British Ships

English Report Sinking U-Boat That Torpedoed Tanker

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 31.—Sinking of three more British ships, with a loss of 12 lives, was reported today as Britain claimed destruction of the German submarine which sank one of the merchant ships.

The other two ships lost were victims of Tuesday's German bombing raids, but their fate did not become known until late tonight, when survivors reached port.

Most of the Nazi crew of the U-boat, more fortunate than the men aboard most attacked submarines, escaped with their lives and were taken prisoner aboard British warships.

The submarine had made an attack upon a convoy of merchantmen, and managed to torpedo the 5,063-ton tanker Vaclite, whose crew was rescued. A British patrol plane promptly attacked the U-boat, bombing her until she disappeared. Warships rushing to the location reported by the seaplane found an undisclosed number of the crew swimming.

Meanwhile, the government announced that effective tomorrow it was taking control of all merchant shipbuilding and repairs, as well as naval shipbuilding.

The bombing of the 4,634-ton British steamer Royal Crown in the North Sea Tuesday with the loss of 12 crew men was disclosed when a lifeboat landed on the British coast with 15 survivors.

One survivor said a German plane flew low, machine-gunning the decks and killing the Royal Crown's anti-aircraft gunner before he could get into action. The plane returned and dropped a bomb which struck amidships.

Four members of the crew were killed outright and the other eight were drowned. The bodies of seven drowned were brought ashore by the lifeboat. A second lifeboat was missing.

The third British shipping loss reported today was the 1,178-ton steamer Highwave, which was bombed off the British coast. Eighteen survivors were landed in the Netherlands. Two were wounded.

(German communiques insisted 18 ships were destroyed in German air raids off Britain's coast Monday and Tuesday. The British admitted the loss of but four, however, besides the Highwave and the Vaclite.)

A French statement today said only 15 out of more than 7,300 allied or neutral ships traveling in such convoys had been lost up to January 24, while the Allied ships captured 21 German ships and sank three others.

The government's control of 17,000,000 tons of shipbuilding—largest merchant fleet in the world—will permit allocation of labor and building materials to the naval and merchant services, and avoid competition between the two.

Swedes Watch Nazi Military Steps on Coast

Stockholm Press Sees Precautioning Move By Reich in Baltic

By George Axelsson.

Copyright by New York Times.

Stockholm, Jan. 31.—German "primary dispositions" of a military nature along its Baltic coast are revealed by the Aftonbladet, an afternoon newspaper which never fails to give prominence to the German view of any event or development.

These dispositions are stated to include the requisitioning of merchants ships in strategically convenient ports, presumably for use as troop transports.

The information is contained in an editorial flaying former Foreign Minister Sandler's policy, by way of expressing gratitude over the fact that the country now is blessed with "more far-sighted management of its foreign policy."

While ellegedly nowhere as important as "recent grossly exaggerated alarmist reports would have one believe," the paper admits the existence of what it thinks are probably elementary precautionary measures to meet any new situation if the Allies were successful in their "sly attempts" to bring Scandinavia into the war.

The second theory mentioned is that the Reich might wish to secure for herself a deciding influence over Russia and Finland, and apply this influence quickly should it bacome desirable.

The dispositions, the Aftonbladet says, began in mid-December. If they have not been considered a threat to Sweden, the Aftonbladet feels that it is entirely due to the present foreign minister's policy.

Swedish fears of Germany have been at least temporarily allayed. Sweden prefers to act as if the world would be at her door any moment and is preparing accordingly.

Meanwhile, Finland is not overlooked. Popular contributions are now well above the $4,000,000 mark. The movement to donate a day's salary out of a month's pay has grown to where it is estimated that 300,000 Swedes contributed in January and have pledged to repeat.

Huge newspaper ads call for more volunteers for Finland, saying that skiers, automatic and ordinary riflemen and hand grenade throwers are urgently needed.

Russian Aviators Protest At Bombing Finnish Towns

Three Soldiers Slain Before Comrades For Grumbling About War, Prisoners In North Declare; Populace Disgruntled

By Harold Denny

Copyright by New York Times

With the Finnish Army on the North Central Front, Jan. 31.—Some of the Soviet aviators now flying over Finland disapprove of the bombing of open towns and one of them has dared to protest against it.

Political commissars in the Red army—actually Communist propagandists having equal power with military commanders—recently suppressed openly-expressed disapproval of the war against Finland. A week ago a political commissar caused to be shot without trial and in front of the whole company three soldiers who had grumbled about the war.

These and other glimpses behind the scenes of the Red army were given us by Russian prisoners who arrived at a point just behind the lines on their way back to a concentration camp.

Among the prisoners were a captain and a sergeant, whose bombing plane was shot down a few hours ago just inside the Finnish lines with a four-barreled antiaircraft machine gun recently captured from the Russians.

The captain, whom I questioned first, said "I have a family, a wife and three children. They would be sent to Siberia if it was found out I had made a statement."

He would talk only when he was assured repeatedly that his name, home town and any other data by which he could possibly be identified would be withheld.

The captain had been in the air force for a considerable time. He was a member of the Communist Party and his conversation, as one so often finds with such Russians, was a curious blending of realistic, intelligible facts and the familiar party propaganda. Thus one moment he was saying that the Soviet people live in a straight-jacket and in bodies and minds were slaves, and the next that Russia was a democracy and that the people could elect their own leaders.

"There is no real dissatisfaction in the army," he said. He and the machine gunner were from an airdrome high up on the eastern frontier and had not been engaged in bombing cities and towns in southern Finland. Their objectives, the captain said, ordinarily were military objectives, such as roads, bridges, railway stations, storehouses, etc., in the evacuated towns in the war zone along the eastern front.

But about a week ago, the captain said, he was ordered to bomb a certain town outside the war zone. He criticized the orders, and asked for another job.

"They took my plane from me and grounded me for five days," he said. "They told me to think the matter over; then they called me and ordered me to bomb a military point. Of course I obeyed and it was on that flight that I was shot down."

"What would you have done if you had been ordered again to bomb an open town" I asked him.

"I would have objected again."

"And what would have happened?"

"The same thing that happens in any army if you disobey orders."

"Would you have died rather than to bomb civilians?" I asked him.

"Well, I don't know. You know how it is. I have a wife and three children."

The captain expressed himself as amazed and horrified when told the civilian houses had been bombed wholesale and the occupants killed and that several hospitals had been bombed. The sergeant expressed similar surprise.

"Such bombings are criminal!" he exclaimed.

The two contradicted each other as to Russian sentiment at the beginning of the war. The captain said there was great enthusiasm for the war at first but that now the soldiers wanted only to get out of it and the civil population felt the country was not properly prepared.

The sergeant insisted there had never been any sentiment in Russia for this war. "The army officials argued 'the war is necessary, let's cheer for it.' When we are ordered to 'hurrah,' we 'hurrah.' That is the way things go in Russia."

A Modest Beginning

In accordance with a tentative program which he outlined recently, President Roosevelt has transmitted to Congress recommendations for the construction of a limited number of small hospitals in particularly needy communities. Between $7,500,000 and $10,000,000 is requested to enable the Public Health Service to inaugurate the program.

"I am confident," the President says in his message, "that even this limited undertaking will bring substantial returns in the saving of lives, rehabilitation of workers, and increased health and vigor of the people."

The President emphasizes the fact that the hospitals are to be located in communities too poor to contribute to the cost of construction. For that reason it is imperative that the selection of locations for the contemplated hospitals be made most carefully by experts who have studied community needs. It is especially important to enlist local cooperation to make sure that the hospitals can and will be adequately maintained by the local authorities.

As the President notes, this is not an ambitious project. But it is one that should afford most valuable guidance in the later development of a more extensive undertaking. Even if it were practicable at this time to spend large sums, it would be extremely rash to speed up construction of hospitals without careful preliminary testing. The very modesty of the program means that there will be less temptation to provide facilities that are too elaborate and too expensive for local communities to maintain.

An Anomalous Agency

Acting Comptroller General Elliott declares that the Welfare and Recreational Association which operates cafeterias in Federal buildings has been functioning for nearly 13 years under an invalid contract. One wonders how this illegal organization so long escaped the searching, censorious eyes of former Comptroller General McCarl.

One also wonders how long its anomalous status would have gone unremarked had it not been for the refusal of a minority of the association's employes to abide by the terms of a compulsory check-off arrangement negotiated by the association with the United Cafeteria Employes Union.

Under that contract the employes were given the option of either contributing a dollar each month to the union or to some charity. Since a rebellious minority refused to cooperate with the arrangement, officials of the association appealed to the Comptroller General to determine whether salary deductions should be made in such cases. The latter replied that he had no jurisdiction. This left the association in a most embarrassing situation and pointedly called attention to its untenable position.

The only proper solution of the problem created by an organization that is neither public nor private is to define its status without further delay by abrogating the contract which the association made with the Government at the time of its establishment. It was incorporated as a private, nonprofit-making agency by the head of the Interior Department's public building branch, who was also its president. The Comptroller General's office has advised the Federal Works Agency administrator that this contract is invalid.

The Acting Comptroller General also charges that many improper expenditures have been made. In view of the loose and illegal character of the arrangement such irregularities were to have been expected. The association has, however, filled a very real need and has been carried on by public-spirited officials, most of whom, no doubt, have rendered efficient service.

Demands for the recapture of funds which Mr. Elliott thinks should have been turned over to the Government are virtually equivalent to asking the Government to make payment to itself. For the property belonging to the association is held by the Comptroller General to be Government property in any case.

The ultimate solution apparently lies in regularizing the status of the association by legislation establishing it as a governmental agency and empowering it to carry on operations as before, while demanding an accounting from the Government officials in charge. The less desirable alternative would be to grant contracts for operation to private concessionaires on the basis of competitive bids.

Hitler's Pep Talk

Adolf Hitler's Sportspalast speech in celebration of the seventh anniversary of his accession to power was in no small measure the speech of a thwarted and embittered individual who seeks through vehement utterance to cloak an inner uncertainty.

The events of the last few months have made it plain that the Fuehrer's original calculations regarding the course of the war have gone badly awry. There appears to be little doubt that, following the successful attack on Poland, the Fuehrer confidently expected Great Britain and France to lay down their arms. Thus in his Reichstag address of October 6, Hitler spoke with the arrogance of a conqueror. The peace he offered Great Britain and France at that time was a dictated peace, not a negotiated settlement. And he threatened the Allies with dire consequences should they reject his demands.

The Sportspalast speech is a confession that the late peace offensive fell on completely barren ground. Neither Great Britain nor France has manifested the slightest inclination to make peace with Germany on Hitler's terms. They have, on the contrary, shown a resolute detemination, cost what it may, to continue the war to a successful conclusion. And that attitude has presented Hitler with a problem more baffling than any he contemplated when he so recklessly plunged his nation into war last September.

His problem is at once internal and external. If the Nazi regime is to survive, Great Britain and France must be crushed. That is no easy task. It demands sacrifices of the already hard-pressed German people infinitely greater than those they have hitherto been called upon to bear. And the German people must be persuaded that these sacrifices will not be in vain.

With this in mind, Hitler rang the changes on the argument that the aim of the Allies is to dismember the Reich and "scatter" its 80,000,000 inhabitants, while at the same time giving the German people bombastic assurances that Germany is powerful enough to defeat her enemies.

On the one hand, there were the now familiar references to the iniquities of the Treaty of Versailles, the bitter attack on Chamberlain and Daladier, the hymn of hate against Great Britain. On the other hand, there was the assertion that "Germany today is the greatest world power," the claim that German rearmament has made greater progress during the last five months than in the previous seven years, the references to the alleged advantages of the Russian agreement, the rhetorical assertion that "we will never capitulate."

In the same category was the echo of the now familiar threat that Germany is about to wage war in earnest. "They wanted war," said Hitler. "They shall have it."

Neither Great Britain nor France is in any degree discounting that threat. Indeed, they are taking it for granted that growing pressures within the Reich will compel Hitler to take the offensive. Nor can they look forward to this period of heightened bloodletting in anything but a grim mood. But they are ready. They knew what they were in for when they went to war. And in this particular the British and French peoples have an advantage over the inhabitants of the Reich which no propagandist efforts by Hitler and other Nazis can altogether destroy.

Wrapped In Red Tape

It is little short of miraculous that, after two months of war, the Finns still manage to hold the upper hand in their struggle with an enemy many times more numerous and powerful than they.

But, as the Finnish Minister to France told the Anglo-American Press Club in Paris, yesterday, "an army can perform one miracle, but never a series of miracles." The Red army has repeatedly been hurled back on all fronts. The fact remains, however, that Russia possesses almost endless reserves with which to replace those killed, wounded and taken prisoner by the Finns. New Russian divisions can constantly be hurled into the fray.

The Finns have no such advantage. They have no large reserves of manpower, and, however carefully they may husband their resources, the constant attrition of battle will probably tell against them in the long run. In the meantime, their military successes have had no counterpart in the air. In that sphere the Bolsheviks have enjoyed practically uncontested sway. They have been able to carry out an uninterrupted series of air raids against military and civilian centers in Finland. The cumulative effect of these raids may, in the long run, be devastating to the little nation's capacity to continue waging war. The spectacular strength the Finns have displayed on land should not, therefore, cloak their crucial weakness in the air.

If the Finns are not to go under, therefore, aid from the outside world will have to be forthcoming and it will have to come soon. It is this circumstance which makes the spectacle of Congressional indecision on the proposed Finnish loan such a mockery of American public opinion.

The air is full of paeans of praise for the Finns. But when it comes to helping them continue their brave defense, by making it possible for them to secure funds with which to purchase needed supplies, oratory has no echo in action. Congress is proving to be one vast circumlocution office. The Finnish loan question is being wrapped up in miles of red tape. It is not a pleasant spectacle.

Our 150-Year-Old Court

During the 150 years of its history the Supreme Court has often been the center of controversy. On several occasions the character of this unique tribunal has been altered by shifts in public opinion or by political developments over which it has had no control. Through all of its vicissitudes, however, the Court has retained a truly remarkable prestige built upon its reputation for fair and independent judgment.

As the Court today rounds out an even century and a half of existence, there is cause for much gratification that it has recently weathered one of the most severe storms in its history without losing the confidence of the people. The Court is not the same institution it was three years ago. Probably it has undergone more far-reaching changes than it had ever previously experienced in so short a period. Yet this transition has come about in a natural way. The open assault upon its independence three years ago is now only an unpleasant memory.

The history of President Roosevelt's dealings with the Supreme Court is packed with irony. Congress thwarted the Executive's efforts to reorganize the Court, but Mr. Roosevelt has since exerted a greater influence upon the Supreme bench than any other President since Washington. Now that he has a Court of his own choosing, however, that achievement must seem far less important than it once appeared to be. For Congress has begun to put a check upon the experimental type of legislation that formerly encountered very critical scrutiny in the Court.

Only three Presidents since Washington have named as many as five justices to the Supreme bench. Lincoln, like the present Executive, was undoubtedly eager to build up a Court that would sustain his policies. But the five justices he named did not constitute a majority of the Court, for it then had ten members. President Taft chose five men to sit on the Supreme bench without any apparent effort to modify its views of the Constitution. Mr. Roosevelt alone has selected a majority of the Court's membership with the object of changing its trend of constitutional interpretation.

That fact detracts somewhat from the prestige of the Court. But it must not be supposed that the new justices, now in the majority, will necessarily be subservient to any particular point of view. The Court was not reorganized. It has merely acquired five new members. These judges, like their colleagues, are the keepers of their own consciences. Their independent judgment may frequently prove to be at variance with that of the President or his successors.

The important fact is that the Supreme Court enters upon another half century of service to the Nation with no break in its record as an independent tribunal. It appears to have settled some controversial issues that have plagued the country in recent decades. On the other hand, some of its decisions have magnified such momentous questions as where the power of Congress under the commerce clause ends. There has been a strong tendency in the Court to stretch this power to cover regulation of almost any sort of economic activity. But this week's decision upholding the New York City sales tax, despite the fact that it tends to interfere with the flow of commerce across State lines, suggests that the Court is not unmindful of the powers of the States.

Since it first met a century and a half ago, the great question before the Court has been the adjustment of power between the State and Federal governments in accord with the letter and spirit of the Constitution. That is still its great task. Because of the current tendency toward centralization of authority in Washington, and the urgent need for preservation of local responsibility, this problem of adjustment within the terms of the basic law will continue to be a severe test of the judicial statesmanship of Chief Justice Hughes and his colleagues.

The best interests of the country as well as those of the Court will be served if fewer questions in this confused sphere arise in the near future. The new justices need time to get their bearing. No doubt, too, the Court is still somewhat influenced by the crisis through which it has passed. And courts seldom do their best work under tension or in times of emergency.

Pensions And Relief

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why are thousands of dollars given to those who have plenty while others of our land are destitute and suffering for even the crumbs that fall from the tables of the favored?

My question may arouse a storm of comment, but that will not disturb me or change my sentiments. Those who have held high positions in politics, business and even in would-be charitable organizations are constantly being handed money or expensive gifts at the sacrifice and discomfort of less important folk. It seems to have become the thing to do and no one offers a protest—Americans have become the slaves of custom.

On one page of a Washington daily newspaper yesterday there appeared a statement accredited to the "First Lady" following her visit to the District Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains. Its condition, she states, is "far below standards of decency"—hundreds of unfortunates are crowded into altogether inadequate quarters without sufficient medical attention or other human service. All of this from lack of funds to operate the home properly.

On the very next page of the same paper appears this heading: "$10,000 for Mrs. Borah." This item was inserted in a deficiency appropriation bill by a Senate subcommittee. Rather quick action in the one case—heartless delay in the other. The $10,000 item, I gather, follows precedent. It's about time that precedent was broken.

Mrs. Coolidge, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Taft and many others have been given pensions that must be paid by taxpayers. The husbands of these ladies—and I grant them all honor and respect due their memories—were paid and paid well for their services. If our country is a democracy let it show a democratic spirit and service. It is high time to take care of the destitute and suffering and put an end to lavish gratuities.

War Debts Committee

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been reading about the newly organized "Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee," with Senator Ernest Lundeen as chairman.

Well, it's about time! Why the heck hasn't America demanded payment of these war debts before this? Why have we been so easy-going and indifferent? Creditors and debtors in private life follow a different procedure, but when nations borrow of the most kindly, generous and sympathetic fellow nation in the world—Uncle Sam—they seem to feel that they have nothing to pay back.

This committee has hit the nail on the head and I wish it unlimited success. Let's remind the European nations that we are sick and tired of excuses and waiting; that we want the billions we loaned them repaid to us, either in cash or in real estate, such as the West Indian islands, or in funds which some of these nations have been keeping safely in American banks; and that we don't mean "maybe!"

Wages Of National Symphony Musicians

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with considerable interest the letter to The Post which you published on January 27 signed by "Benjamin Duck," under the heading, "Union vs. the National Symphony." Also being a contributor to the National Symphony Orchestra, I decided to find out what the score really was. A telephone call to the headquarters of the National Symphony Association instantly brought me the information I was seeking.

Evidently "Mr. Duck" is somewhat mixed up in a number of his statements. I do not know what he regards as starvation wages, but I learned that the men in our orchestra are employed by the National Symphony only 23 weeks in the year (outside of summer concerts for which they are paid extra), and during that time they receive $50 a week or a total of $1,150 for their services during the 23-week season.

I also learned that they get extra compensation when on the road, which brings their earnings during the present season over $1,200. If one wishes to include the six weeks of water-gate work last summer, a minimum of $210 should be added to this figure which makes a total of $1,360 which is the lowest amount paid to an orchestra player. Of course first chair men receive more than this.

Our friend, "Mr. Duck," mentions the St. Louis Orchestra as an ideal at which to shoot. Upon investigation I learned that a player in that orchestra receives a total of $1,380 which is only $20 more than the National Symphony player got during the present year. If I played in either orchestra the figure which would interest me would be the total amount I was getting for my services and a difference of $20 between our orchestra and St. Louis' does not seem as greatly out of line as "Mr. Duck" would have us believe.

Our good barnyard friend also mentions that National Symphony players see no hope of increased wages and are therefore discouraged. Again my telephone was brought into play and I learned that the first season's earnings of our orchestra players was $550. A little quick arithmetic brought home the inescapable fact that in 9 years the total earnings per musician have been more than doubled. I am wondering just how many of my non-musical friends can claim that during the past 9 lean years their salaries have increased more than 100 per cent.

Somehow this picture presents a rather different one than the writer has indicated. I have no doubt that the above facts were not known to him, but the true situation is to my way of thinking very interesting. I further understand that during the 29 weeks of each year (exclusive of possible water-gate employment) the men are entirely free to augment their income by teaching or playing in theater or other orchestras and that most of them have this outside employment.

Without going into the question of whether or not they should get the 30 per cent increase for which they are asking, I find myself interested in the information I have obtained on the above questions, and thinking that "Mr. Duck" and others might also be interested, I have ventured to answer his communication.

American Student Union

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would like to clear up many misconceptions of the American Student Union circulated after its last convention at the University of Wisconsin a month ago.

The main issue at the convention was whether or not Russia should be condemned for her invasion of Finland in the peace resolution which pased unanimously. Because an amendment condemning Soviet action was defeated 322 to 49, the A. S. U. is called a communist organization full of Russian agents. If this vote is used as a basis for that contention, then the 49 may well be considered agents of Finland and the Allies.

The issue is not the merit of Russia's action. Both the majority and minority are united, as are most of the American people, in their opposition to the entry of the United States into the European wars. The 322 said that to condemn Russian invasion would be to add to the tremendous anti-Soviet propaganda which would lead first to official material aid to Finland and then active United States participation, as during the years immediately following the World War.

The 49 said that in order to combat this pro-war propaganda our stand on Soviet action would have to be made clear. Therefore, we called for a condemnation of the attack on Finland. Thus the vote was not to condone Russia's action but to avoid being duped by the unneutral persons who are using Finland to create a war hysteria. Many of the 322 were not in sympathy with the attack.

A national liberal caucus was organized to work for a vote of the entire membership of the A. S. U. on the rejected amendment. This has practically been won. Now we are trying to rally all students into the A. S. U who will support the peace resolution condemning all war propaganda and unneutral acts, although they are not in sympathy with the Soviet attack and want the peace resolution to voice the sentiments.

Member of the National Executive Committee of the American Student Union.

More American Music

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Being a patron of the National Symphony Orchestra since its beginning, I have been interested in the controversy as to why we are not hearing more American music.

One naturally expects to hear a good deal of American music in the Nation's Capital, and we are hearing so little. The old masters can never be replaced, but it is so refreshing to hear some of the new vital music, along with them. One doesn't always choose to see a Shakespeare play at the theater, so why should one always have to hear Brahms, Beethoven and the other great composers.

If we could hear more American music, we probably would learn to like it better. One hearing seems hardly fair to the composer, the audience or the orchestra men. The oftener we hear a piece, the more we understand it, and I think that we should be given a chance to make our own decision as to whether we like it or not.

Bombs Over Shetland

There it was on the breakfast table, the morning paper with its headline, "Shetland Islands Bombed."

Somehow it gave you a curious little jolt inside. Breakfast wasn't what you wanted now. "A crofter's house shattered" . . . It seemed impossible. In Europe, yes, but up there, not on those islands and people, serene and apart, on top of the world.

That was the way we left them—serene and happy. We had stood on the crest of one of the sea-slashed cliffs looking over at Lerwick, the capital of the islands. Down a gully was a stone-lined sheep run leading over a hill to a stone hut. Beyond the gully was a brilliant little lake swarming with sea birds, and on the opposite side of this lake rose a stony hump of mason work, an ancient Pict house. The heather was soft and springy to walk on . . . a fleecy Shetland sheep bounced nimbly out of our way as we descended.

"Mon, ye no can go back if ye havna' seen Noss." We had promised our old friend at the dock we'd see Noss immediately.

"Now, ye cin take this motor launch across the bay to the Isle of Bressy, yonder. Ye'll have to walk across Bressy to ye come to the other side. The water's ony about a hundred foot across there, so if ye'll whistle, the boat man will row across and git ye."

Thus, following one of the citizens' enthusiastic desire to have us see their show place, we departed for Noss.

The winding, wall-lined, dusty road across the Isle of Bressy was pleasant to walk. There was a faint smell of cattle, dust and curing hay in the salt air. Compact, squat, crofters' houses dotted the little island. Ahead of us were two men. When we reached the crest of the hill and looked down we saw that they had whistled for the old man, and his boat and he were waiting for us.

Our ferryman was a gnarled old fellow with glittering little eyes and a drooping, wild mustache. Thirty years he had lived on the little Isle of Noss and hastened to the whistle of customers.

"I watch the laird's sheep," he told us. No one else lived on the island.

The particular interest of Noss lies in the Noup and the Holm. The Noup, or the southern end of the island, is a huge cliff towering some 600 feet above the churning water below. The Holm was once a part of the island, but through erosion and weathering has now become separated from the mainland of Noss by a yawning chasm some 80 feet wide.

There is the story of how a daring Shetlander some 300 years ago made his way to the top of that 200-foot pillar of sandstone and strung a cable line across to the mainland, but was unsuccessful in his attempt to make a return crossing. His cradle was used for years to transport sheep across for grazing on the Holm and to gather birds' eggs.

The sun was setting as we waited for the launch to cross from Lerwick and take us back, and we talked with the man who waited with us. He was on a vacation from Liverpool. That was where he worked now, but he had been raised in Lerwick and returned every summer. There was a quiet satisfaction in his eyes as he talked and a contentment away from the soot and cement of Liverpool. He talked of sailing in Lerwick harbor and fishing among the islands as a boy. I began to sense the feeling of love these Shetlanders have for their home. Neither Scotch, English nor Nordic, they are apart from the world, isolated from the strife of war, tariff, crime and politics . . . a little nation within themselves on the top of the world in the rolling waste of the cold North Sea—the people of Thule.

The launch was coming. A brilliant, scarlet sunset hung low in the sky, painting the gray of Lerwick's buildings a soft warm color. A white, trim mackerel boat from Sweden rocked gently in the roll of the water; a coal hulk rested heavily in the water waiting for the fleet of herring trollers to fuel up for another day of drifting; pyramids of herring barrels rose along the curing docks. Gulls whirled and screamed and drifted down to rest on the roof of the herring mart.

The Mission for Deep Sea Fishermen was full that night. Old men with lined, wind-tanned faces, devout in their supplications, filled the wooden benches. Their wives were there, too, sturdy and strong, with hands lined and creased with years of labor. Here and there was an old fellow with his double-breasted blue coat and brass buttons. There were pictures of ships on the wall and one of Christ at the helm of a storm-tossed vessel. Through the small window you could watch a small troller steaming out of the harbor to become a dancing dot on the gray horizon. There was a placid feeling of contentment in the religion of those gray islanders.

The preacher rose from his platform pulpit, a huge hulk of blue-garbed man. Before his crude altar were the words.

"Follow me and I will make ye fishers of men."

We stood on the crest of a heather-covered hill back of Lerwick. The days of fog had passed and the sun came out on a new Shetland. To the north in a limitless stretch of the bluest of blue water lay the hazy driblets of land called the Shetland Islands. It was here that Negley Farson had found his fishing dreams come true. The water was a brilliant sapphire blue under little whitecaps, the stretches of land a murky green haze, marked with a white lighthouse here and there. All was soft green heather and moss grass. A hint of purple was creeping up the hill. The heather would soon bloom. There was not a tree in sight.

"Bare . . . treeless as the desert sand, yet somehow lovelier for that."

A Forgiving Board

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the Building Service Employes' International Union has refused to accept the resignation of George Scalese, who muscled into the presidency of this organization after repeal diverted the survivors of the Capone mob from bootlegging to the labor racket. This vote of forgiveness and confidence followed the disclosure of the fact that William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, indorsed a petition for a Presidential pardon for Scalese on file at the Federal Department of Justice. Mr. Scalese reproved those who revealed the fact that he had served four years in Atlanta for the crime of white slavery and said he had put in 27 years of labor in an endeavor to "attain success not only for himself but for humankind."

The judge who sentenced Scalese to prison for exploiting a young girl for money said the testimony was nauseating and gave him an unusually long sentence for that reason, but the reference to Scalese's endeavors "for humankind" is no less revolting. Scalese has not been a laborer; he has been an associate of gangsters and bootleggers, and he is now engaged in an attempt to muscle out of the union the president of an old established local in San Francisco, Charles Hardy, jr., on the ground among others, that Hardy disseminated "false, malicious propaganda" castigating officers of the international. The propaganda described as false and malicious consisted of the same information that has been proved against Scalese, namely, that he was convicted of pandering, or, in the term used by the Federal Courts, white slavery. Hardy denies that he was responsible for the distribution of the pedigree of the racketeer who took over an important unit of the American Federation of Labor, but that makes no difference.

Green Helps To Raise Power Of Scalese

THE FACT REMAINS that this distinguished colleague of William Green has had the gall to remove a man on such grounds from the presidency of a local union of which he was one of the founders. The propoganda was not false, and the question whether it was malicious is debatable, because it is not unreasonable to argue that the person who brought Scalese's character into question before the union members had the decent motive of driving out racketeers, a task which William Green has not undertaken.

Instead of doing anything to rebuke this dictatorial attempt to destroy dissenters, Mr. Green has given the weight and prestige of his office to an attempt to increase Scalese's power. Up to this time Scalese does not possess the right even to vote or hold the most inconsequential public office, but Green supports his rule as international president of one of the biggest unions in the Amreican Federation of Labor at a moment when Scalese is passing an economic death sentence on an old-time union man whose character cannot possibly suffer by comparison with his own.

The other charges against Hardy have to do with the financial affairs of his union, but even on that score it would be much more pertinent and important to provide a full, thorough accounting of the funds of the international. Hardy insists that no accounting has ever been made since Scalese muscled in and that Scalese refused even to tell members of the locals how much salary he draws as president.

Authorities Know His Police Record

THE FEDERAL BUREAU of Investigation has information on Scalese, and the police of New York, particularly those of Brooklyn, and the Chicago police are well acquainted with him and his associates in the labor racket. So, Mr. Green now has an excellent opportunity to call for a public hearing as to the worthiness of his esteemed colleague to rule a big labor union, with the power to expel from office and permanently blackmail from employment men who have the temerity to recall his criminal past. Having convinced himself of Scalese's character, Mr. Green should not merely consent to, but for labor's own sake, to which he is always so touchingly loyal, should demand an examination of Scalese's career since he finished his prison term.

Scalese's executive board reports with pride that the membership has been raised from 19,000 to 70,000 in five years. That might only mean, however, that thousands of nominally free American citizens have been racketeered into a union and compelled to pay tribute to a white slaver for the right to work but with no right to ask what is done with their money. It will be noticed that there is no pretense that the rank and file were invoked to vote on Scalese's fitness for office. He got his vote of confidence from his international executive board in a sudden, secret meeting in Chicago.

Jersey to Finance Industrial Expansion

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 31 (AP).—Pledges of millions of dollars by New Jersey interests to finance new industrial construction in the State for "companies with satisfactory earning records and sound management" were announced today by Armory L. Haskell, director of the New Jersey council. The head of the State's official promotion agency said it had arranged the financing and that capital already had been provided for a number of new industries.

Haskell said the council had undertaken the job because Federal undistributed-profit-tax regulation had depleted the reserves normally carried by small and medium-sized industrial concerns for plant expansion and modernization.

Mr. Hull's Agreements: The Way Forward

ENOUGH HAS been said in the debate over the Hull trade agreements to show, it seems to me, that the question has been presented to Congress in a way which can lead to no good result. There is being brewed, quite unnecessarily, a tempest in a teapot, and in this dispute, regardless of the final outcome, everyone will have lost much more than he has gained. Yet there is, I think, a simple solution on which reasonable men might agree.

The executive power to make trade agreements expires this coming June. Mr. Hull is asking Congress to extend this power for another term of years.

Now the evident fact is that even if Mr. Hull obtains a renewal of his powers, there is no likelihood whatever that for the duration of the war he will be able to negotiate new trade agreements of any importance. The principle of the Hull agreements has been carried as far as it is possible to carry it in the world as it is today; indeed, the unavoidable consequence of the war on the belligerents and on the neutrals must be that their foreign trade will be brought more and more thoroughly under government control. Therefore, in so far as Mr Hull, or his successor, uses these powers, it will be, not to remove trade barriers in the interests of free and peaceable commerce, but to make detailed readjustments in the existing agreements. In war time there is no possible escape from the increasing regimentation of foreign trade. Mr. Hull is, therefore, asking for legal powers that during the war he will not be able to exercise for the promotion of freer trade.

Asked Powers Useless During War Period

IT IS EQUALLY evident that the principle of the Hull agreements cannot be abandoned by the United States without delivering an almost irreparable blow to the hope of a good reconstruction after the war. If at this time the United States Congress were to put itself on record against the ideal of promoting the peaceable exchange of goods, it is difficult to see where men can hope to find a decent material foundation for the establishment of peace.

Thus it would appear that Mr. Hull is asking for powers that he cannot exercise in war time. Yet if these powers are destroyed by Congress, there will be destroyed the best hope of reconstruction after the war.

So I venture to suggest the following solution: that the existing controversy be adjourned and that a fresh start be made; that the proposal to renew the powers be accompanied by an underaking: not to negotiate important new agreements during the war; to use these powers only to make specific readjustments in existing agreements to meet special and unforseen war conditions; to make these readjustments only after consulting the Congressional leaders; and that Congress be invited to set up a standing committee on commercial policy during and after the war for the purpose of studying and advising the executive on the complex questions arising out of war controls, foreign exchange, gold, and the like.

This is, I submit, a practical and constructive way to deal with the real question in the controversy. It would put an end to the horrible spectacle of the Republican Party committing itself to a commercial policy which shows no signs of enlightenment since the darkest days of the Harding administration. It would put an end to the very real danger that a sound and necessary principle will be repudiated in an election year under the pressure of special interests and reckless partisan politicians. It will put an end to a political struggle in which, to win his victory, Mr. Hull may have to pay an exorbitant price—in preoccupation with partisan politics, in the deterioration of the work of the State Department. It will vindicate the principle and yet it meets squarely the reasonable objections of fair-minded opponents: that under these exceptional conditions, trade agreements have political implications and that Congress ought to be consulted about them.

Above all, it will place the whole matter in its true relationship to the practical realities.

Present Conditions Block Free Trade

IT IS EVIDENT, I think, that foreign trade cannot be conducted in war time according to Mr. Hull's principles. There is a shortage of shipping: therefore, cargo space is rationed. There is a shortage of foreign exchange: therefore, purchases abroad are rationed. Some of the belligerents are blockaded. The others, which control the seas, must reduce the imports that are not absolutely necessary and must expand the imports that are needed for the war. So there can be no free trade: on the contrary buying has to be conducted as a government monopoly. Moreover, the buying and the selling cannot be done commercially, that is by buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest. It has to be done politically: so as to injure the enemy and to support allies and potential allies and wavering neutrals.

So if Mr. Hull assured Congress that he would not negotiate new agreements during the war, he would merely be recognizing the facts.

It is evident also that when there is an armistice and even where there is a peace treaty, these war controls cannot be removed at once. One of the great mistakes of the last war lay in thinking that the manpower and economic machinery of nations could be mobilized by the governments and then left to demobilize itself without firm government direction. That mistake cannot be repeated. It has taken countries like Germany, Great Britain and France at least five years to mobilize; it may take fully that long to demobilize.

Hull's Principles To Indicate Objective

DURING THIS PERIOD of demobilization Mr. Hull's principles will indicate the objective. But in themselves they cannot guide and control this enormously complicated transition from war to peace. That will require measures which no one today has fully grasped, which no one has seriously started to study. So why not ask Congress to select a standing committee to prepare for the difficult future, and what is more natural than to regard consultation about how to administer the trade agreements powers as part of the preparation?

It may be asked: why renew the powers if they are not to be used; why not wait until the time comes to use them? The answer, I think, is, first, that a failure to renew them will be regarded everywhere as a return to the most reactionary kind of commercial policy. Second, the powers should be kept alive, not to make new agreements, but as an instrument for readjusting details of the existing agreements. Third, a study to prepare for the future will be academic if the members of the committee merely collect memoranda and do not regard themselves as men exercising real, even if temporarily dormant, powers.

Blueprints Impossible For Post-war Era

MOREOVER, as I see it, the post-war reconstruction cannot be formulated in a set of blueprints drawn up by men who do not have daily experience with the economic consequences of the war itself. They will not understand the world they are trying to reconstruct. So I believe that continual negotiation with foreign nations over details is the only way to develop the knowledge of what to do when the war ends.

I would go even further, and say that by continuing to negotiate there will emerge out of the specific studies of trade movements, foreign exchange, gold, and the like, shadow agreements for the demobilization and the post-war reconstruction. And if, as is conceivable, the war ends so inconclusively that demobilization is impossible, then we shall have learned from these continual negotiations more than we shall otherwise know about what to expect.

Roosevelt And Lewis

By Mark Sullivan

Bill For Services Rendered

IF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT were a man of reflection, what would he think now about his several years of relations with John L. Lewis? But we'll never know that. The common impression is that Mr. Roosevelt is a man who neither repines about the past, nor worries about the future. In that philosophy, as nothing to come will go wrong, so nothing past was a mistake. Presumably that goes for himself and for the country. (Not all of us have the good fortune to share his gay and self-confident insouciance.)

Mr. Lewis—he had been a Republican most of his life—joined up with Mr. Roosevelt in the campaign of 1936. The ceremony of adherence consisted of Mr. Lewis giving $469,668.91 out of the United Mine Workers' treasury to the Roosevelt campaign funds.

A campaign contribution of that size implies obligation on the part of the recipient. But let us say at once that much of Mr. Lewis' contribution could be regarded as gratitude for the past, for help rendered by Mr. Roosevelt to the whole body of labor. Mr. Roosevelt, during his first term, had done several things that greatly benefited the mine workers, along with other labor. By the early national recovery act, the now-forgotten blue eagle, the mine workers' pay had been raised, their union made more strong.

White House Doors Closed To Lewis

YET INEVITABLY even if intangibly, that $469,000, as men in politics view such things, carried implication of future obligation on Mr. Roosevelt's part. Mr. Roosevelt acted as if he was conscious of this, and uncomfortable about it. Preceding the election, during the campaign and before, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Lewis had been as the mortise and the tenon. Mr. Lewis was at the White House whenever he felt like dropping in. He could get Mr. Roosevelt on the phone as readily as he could get his own secretary. The two were in cahoots. Companionably they confabbed; politically they canoodled.

But immediately after the election, Mr. Roosevelt passed into the attitude of many a man who is conscious of having incurred an obligation which he wishes he had not. Or as if he felt that anything he did for Mr. Lewis now might be misinterpreted. He no longer felt at ease with Mr. Lewis. Since he could not be at ease with him, he did not see him. When Mr. Lewis called at the White House, he was given the "run around" by the President's secretaries. When Mr. Lewis called on the telephone, he could sense the crackling ice in the crisp voice that said the President's wire was busy. From the election in November, 1936, until the middle of January, 1937, Lewis saw the President exactly once.

It was the worse because Mr. Lewis' labor rival, Mr. William H. Green, of the A. F. L., was at the White House often. This fact, observed by labor small fry in Washington, was passed out to labor circles over the country. It created an impression that Mr. Green, not Mr. Lewis, was the fair-haired boy at the White House. That was bad for Mr. Lewis' business—he was just then building up the C. I. O.

C.I.O. Head Blew Up During Auto Strike

MR. LEWIS is no man to suffer irk in silence. On January 21, 1937, he blew up. His C. I. O. auto workers were in a sit-down strike in Michigan, against General Motors. The strike was going badly, the public did not like it.

Mr. Lewis sent for the newspapermen. With some preliminary words of flourish, Mr. Lewis said: "We have advised the Administration . . . that for six months, the economic royalists represented by General Motors, the duPonts and others, contributed their money . . . to drive the President . . . and this Administration out of power. . . . Labor helped the President to repel the economic royalists. The same economic royalists now have their fangs in labor. And labor expects the Administration to support the auto workers in every legal way. This is no time for neutrality, no time for pussyfooting. . . . Labor intervened when the President was in jeopardy."

That sounded like a suggestion that Mr. Roosevelt ought to come across with a quid pro quo. It appeared, sensationally, in the morning papers of January 22, 1937. The same forenoon, the President had one of his semi-weekly press conferences. Someone asked him about Lewis' statement. Slowly, sententiously, with a manner of carefully choosing his words, Mr. Roosevelt said: "In the interest of peace, there come moments when statements, conversations and headlines are not in order."

Roosevelt Gave Dignified Rebuke

WE ALL—the newspapermen, the newspapers, the public generally—thought that was fine. It was a restrained and dignified rebuke to a man who had intimated that the President should pay a political debt out of the treasury of the public interest. Mr. Lewis had been shown that he couldn't push around the President of the United States. No sirree! The dignity of the Government of the United States was in hands that could not be intimidated.

But this warming comfort was a little chilled when, in the circles where White House gossip stirs, it was learned that within 48 hours Mr. Roosevelt quietly had Mr. Lewis to lunch. And that still more quietly Mr. Roosevelt, through a mutual friend, had sent Lewis a message: "Tell John, I'm with him 100 per cent."

On another occasion, Mr. Roosevelt administered to Mr. Lewis the gentle rebuke of a Shakespearean quotation. In the "little steel" strike, when both steel and Mr. Lewis were emitting loud bellicosities, Mr. Roosevelt told the newspapermen to quote him as saying, "A plague o' both your houses." Mr. Lewis bellowed back: "It ill behooves one who has supped at labor's table, and been sheltered in labor's house, to curse with equal fervor, and fine impartiality, both labor and its adversaries."

Japan Reveals Her Aims

Special Correspondence of The Post

IF THE GODS remain kind, Mr. Wang Ching-wei, the deposed deputy chief of the Kuomintang, will next week formally inaugurate in shell-scarred Nanking a Japanese-sponsored "Federal Chinese Government."

A month or two later, the new regime will open "peace negotiations" with Japan. The pourparlers, attended with the proper fanfare and featured by Mr. Wang's valiant defense of China's independence, will be climaxed with a comprehensive peace treaty.

It will be a fly in Mr. Wang's ointment that the terms of the projected accord have already been made public by one Kao Tsung-wu, erstwhile his leading henchman.

After Mr. Wang and his Japanese military backers signed a preliminary secret agreement on December 30, the document was shown to Mr. Kao. Terrified by the extent of his chief's concessions to Japan, Mr. Kao made photostatic copies of the draft treaty, took the first ship to Hongkong and published the explosive document in the Ta Kung Pao, the Manchester Guardian of China.

Both Mr. Wang and his sponsors were badly shaken by the premature revelation of the peace terms, but made no denial of their correctness. Mr. Wang proceeded to Tsingtao, where he is now haggling with the heads of puppet regimes in Central and North China and Inner Mongolia over the spoils.

I FIRST met Mr. Kao in Nanking on a hot August day of 1936. I had just spent a fortnight in North China, interviewing frightened officials of the Japanese-dominated autonomous regimes and arrogant, self-assured Japanese army officers in Tientsin and Peiping.

The Japanese already regarded North China as an adjunct of Manchuria and were putting finishing touches on ambitious plans for the economic exploitation of the region. The murder of a few Japanese newspapermen in distant Szechuan was seized as a pretext for a series of new demands, whose acceptance would have negated the last vestige of Chinese sovereignty north of the Yellow River.

Mr. Yakichiro Suma, now spokesman of the Tokyo foreign office and then consul general in Nanking, made daily calls at the Chinese foreign ministry to threaten, cajole and demand, demand, demand. For this labor of love he was later promoted to the counselorship of the Japanese Embassy in Washington.

DESPITE this pressure I found Mr. Kao calm and quite ready to consider—and partially meet—the Japanese demands. China, he told me, could not and should not fight Japan. Economic laws, he added, necessitated close cooperation between the two nations and this could be achieved despite the saber-rattling of the Japanese militarists.

Mr. Kao is a slight, timid and unlikable man. But he is also a man of courage, for views such as his were in those eventful months rewarded with assassins' bullets. Yet he stuck to his guns and continued to head the highly important east Asiatic affairs bureau of the foreign ministry long after the outbreak of the war.

That he has reversed his tracks and asked the Chinese Government for clemency on the eve of his appointment to a high post in the new Japanese-sponsored regime is to me a convincing proof of the genuinness of the documents published in Hongkong.

THE ACCORD secretly negotiated between Mr. Wang and the Japanese command in Shanghai was said to include the following provisions:

1. Conclusion of a tripartite Japan - China - Manchukuo treaty for joint defense against communism. By virtue of this pact, Japan would be empowered to station troops in certain important areas in China and in Inner Mongolia for the duration of the agreement.

2. Chinese recognition of the puppet state of Manchukuo.

3. Formation of a tripartite economic bloc, whereby China, Manchuria and Japan would become a single economic unit in which Japan would process raw materials produced by the other two members. China's tariffs and the customs system would be revised with a view to assisting in the creation of the bloc.

4. While the Chinese railways are to be nationalized, Japan is to remain in control of all channels of communication and transportation (obviously with an eye on their military importance), of all key industries, major banks and ports.

5. North China and Inner Mongolia are to be governed by autonomous Chinese puppet regimes, assisted by Japanese advisers.

6. Certain strategically important points, such as the islands of Hainan and Amoy, are to be administered by the Japanese military.

STAGGERING as these terms are, they are not surprising. Ever since Prince Konoye's statement on December 22, 1938, the terms Japan would impose on China have been aired in public by cabinet ministers, politicians, ultrapatriots, army officers and newspapermen.

For a moment last September it looked as if Mr. Wang had rebelled against the extent of the concessions demanded of him by the Japanese command in Shanghai. Through radio broadcasts and his newspapers, Wang asked for the withdrawal of the Japanese forces from China, the return of the seized railways and industrial plants and recognition of China's sovereign rights.

It was only a canny move to gain public support, however. In interviews with Japanese newsmen, Mr. Wang admitted that the presence of the Japanese troops would be "necessary" for some time to come and gave assurances of "unity of Japanese and Chinese diplomatic action."

Mr. Wang's spokesman (Chou Fu-hai) frankly admitted that a readjustment of the Sino-Japanese relations "under the present circumstances, may result in some sacrifices on the part of China." Such sacrifices, he added, are "inevitable, because China has lost control over things."

IN TOKYO, heads of the army-controlled Asia Development Board, told the press that Japan would refrain from appointing political advisers to Mr. Wang's government "as such a course may create the impression that Japan is attempting undue interference with China's domestic affairs. Japan, however, would stand ready to provide financial and technical advisers."

In the third week of December, however, the board threw discretion to the winds and defined Japan's peace terms as follows:

"Japan desires no Chinese soil or indemnity. She will respect Chinese sovereignty and will help China's regeneration . . . Japan however, expects that the new central government of China will be so organized as to insure the special status of North China and Inner Mongolia.

"Japan expects China to enter into an anti-communist defense pact and intends to retain troops in North China and Inner Mongolia for the duration of this accord.

"Japan, finally, expects China to collaborate with her in the field of economics. In this connection, North China and Inner Mongolia should be granted a special status and Japanese nationals should be given freedom to reside and transact business in the interior of China."

THE FORMAL acceptance of Japan's peace terms by Mr. Wang will mark the final stage in Japanese military, political and economic entrenchment in the eastern half of China, to the exclusion of all other nations. This will place the United States face to face with the necessity of either recognizing Japan's hegemony over China or taking immediate and drastic steps to protect her interests.

The termination of the Japanese-American Trade Treaty on January 26 has armed the State Department with a big stick which it can employ effectively in compelling respect for American rights and interests.

Congress has an even more lethal weapon in the form of an embargo. The situation in the Orient is rapidly nearing a showdown. Hesitation or an error in judgement at such a moment might well result in the exclusion of the United States from one of the world's most important—politically and economically—areas.

("The poets' series of stamps has been issued by the Government. It includes the likenesses of Longfellow, Whittier, Lowell, Whitman and Riley on one, two, three, five and ten-cent stamps, respectively."—News item.)

Customer:
Pardon me, I'd like to know
Where to find the stamp window.

P. O. Attendant:
What stamps have you, sir, in mind?
Please state, if you will, the kind.

Customer:
Stamps with poets on 'em will
My requirements amply fill.

Attendant:
Two aisles over; Window Three—
Ah, the charms of poetry!

Customer (at the stamp window):
Is this where a fellow can
Get some stamps which show the pan
Of some poet good and great—
At the good old-fashioned rate? —

Clerk:
This is the right window, yes;
We have what you want, I guess:
Longfellows and Lowells, too—
Which have more appeal to you?
If it is a local letter
Whittier will prove the better;
If it's going far away,
Lowell will be quite okay.

Customer:
Well, I'll take four Lowells then,
And some Whittiers; say ten.
Stamps like those at any time
Fill a buyer's mind with rime.

Clerk:
The Muse has had me in a spin
Ever since these stamps came in.

Customer:
Here's a package you might weigh,
So I'll know just what to pay.

Clerk:
Weighing it is my delight;
It's a service very slight.
It will take Walt Whitmans—two—
At the weight a dime will do.

Customer:
'Stead of Whitmans couldn't I
Just one Whitcomb Riley buy?

Clerk:
Yes. One dime's the price of Jim;
Walt is worth but half of him.

Customer:
Oh, I think I might as well
Lay in stamps for quite a spell;
Twenty Longfellows I'll buy—
Whittiers? Well, five I'll try—
Lowells? Well, just make it four—
Five Jim Riley's; nothing more.

Clerk:
Thank you for the buys you've made—
Uncle Sam, he wants your trade;
Poems are made by fools like me
But poets are made by Jim Farley!
Next week we who run the mails
Will present some special sales,
Featuring, to make a test,
Our hot special, Edgar Guest!

Another Splendid Novel Approaches the Screen

'My Son, My Son' Filmed With Ace Cast; A New Luxury Liner for the Potomac River; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WITH SUCH WIDELY READ and universally discussed books as "Gone With the Wind," "Of Mice and Men," "Grapes of Wrath" and numerous others already translated to the motion picture screens of the country, it is interesting to note that Producer Edward Small has his picturization of Howard Spring's best-seller, "My Son, My Son," well on its way toward release as a United Artists attraction.

BELL

It happens to be known to this department that Mr. Small has devoted painstaking thought and arduous effort to the preparation of this beautifully written novel for the screen. Months ago, even we were interrogated as to whether the story should be approached from the viewpoint of the father or of the son; who, in our opinion, would be best qualified to portray the various characters of prime importance to the story; what form, in general, the pictured narrative should take. Just how Mr. Small resolved all of these problems, we have no way of knowing. The final cast, however, has come to hand and seems to be one of eminently judicious selection.

The central figure of rivalry between father and son, Livia Vaynol, will be portrayed by Madeleine Carroll; William Essex, by Brian Aherne, and Oliver Essex, the son, by Louis Hayward. Supporting these three principals will be Laraine Day, as Maeve O'Riorden, daughter of the Irish revolutionary who became a great actress; Henry Hull, as Dermot O'Riorden, her father; Josephine Hutchinson, as Nellie (Moscrop) Essex, Sophie Stewart, as Sheila O'Riorden, Bruce Lester, as Rory O'Riorden, and Lionel Belmore, as Mr. Moscrop. Admirable capability for the faithful interpretation of the pivotal characters in an engrossing story would seem to repose in these excellent players.

What abridgements may have been made in the far-flung movements of the Spring fiction—and there must have been many, the scope of the book being what it is—as I say, are unknown, at the moment, to this desk. That in itself is enough to pique interest in the release of the picture and arouse a bit of impatience for the announcement of the date on which it may be previewed.

With "Gone With the Wind" about to enter its second week, under weather conditions that have greatly moderated, it seems worth noting that long box-office lines are forming daily for the morning and afternoon presentations of this marathon movie, when seats are not reserved. These showings of the picture begin at 9:45 a. m., and 2:45 p. m., and now more than ever it exceedingly behooves any prospective customer to arrive on the scene early to secure something approximating the desired seat location. Contemplating "Gone" in retrospect, there are three scenes that leave an indelible impression upon memory. One is the railroad yard scene in Atlanta, with its thousands of wounded and dying stretched out upon the ground; another is the brief incident in which Scarlett O'Hara shoots the Yankee soldier in the face, at close range, and the third, that long, red velvet staircase in Rhett Butler's palatial home. They are not easy to shake off.

Speaking of box-office lines, it is safe to say that this year's attendance at the theatrical events presented in connection with the President's Birthday celebrations broke all records. Sunday night's "command performance" of "Life With Father," at the National, was a complete sellout, with the President and Mrs. Roosevelt in attendance. At 11 o'clock Tuesday night—a full half-hour before the scheduled time of the midnight shows—the three-abreast ticket line at Loew's Capitol extended from the theater marquee around the corner of F street into Fourteenth and down to Pennsylvania avenue. At the Earle, lines extended in both directions, the one to the south curling around the corner into E street and almost down to Twelfth street. Congratulations to all concerned—especially the customers, who received such ample money's worth for their $1.50 per head.

Comes a wire from Carter T. Barron, Eastern division manager of Loew's, Inc., as follows: "Am happy to announce that nearly 50 leading motion picture executives today voted Ray Bell the first grand award in the annual Quigley competitions. Within several weeks our publicist will travel to Hollywood and receive this award in the presence of leading studio executives. This recognition is annually given to the theater manager or publicist who, in the estimation of the judges, has the most consistent record for 12 full months. To win this award they've got to be mighty full."

The Quigley competitions, to which reference is made, are sponsored by the Martin Quigley publications that hold top place among motion picture trade journals. Their awards in the field of exploitation are the film industry's approximate equivalent of the Pulitzer Prizes. Congratulations, fella, and remember you are still my father!

Announcement is made by that eminent prestidigitator, Harry H. Baker, district manager of the Wilson Line, Inc., that probably on May 16 his company will bring to the Nation's Capital a brand new, streamlined, luxury liner to replace the steamer City of Washington that has been in service on the Potomac River for the last ten summer seasons.

The new, all-steel streamliner, now under construction, will be the last word in modern design, says Mr. Baker, and will boast such features as an air-conditioned dance deck that will accommodate approximately 1,000 dancers; four broad, terraced decks, complete facilities for banquets, spacious committee rooms, observation bridge and many other fine appointments.

This new "queen of the waterway" will have a passenger capacity of 2,400 and will offer the ultimate in passenger comfort. The new steamer will observe the usual schedule of daily runs to Mount Vernon and Marshall Hall Park, with a moonlight cruise each evening.

SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE AND NAN GREY as they appear in two of the principal roles in "The Invisible Man Returns," opening tomorrow on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. The weird character of the title is played by Vincent Price, whose visual nothingness, no doubt, kept him out of this photograph

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 31.

Warners all but wept when they had to postpone "The Prime Minister" because Laurence Olivier was starring in Bob Leonard's "Pride and Prejudice." Now it looks like a lucky break, for Warners are burning the midnight oil trying to persuade Vivien Leigh to play opposite Olivier as Disraeli's wife. And the chances look very good—that is, if the studios will let them do a road tour of "Romeo and Juliet" first, and will they clean up! I'd like a percentage of those profits. Michael Hogan just finished the script of "The Prime Minister" and Hal Wallis is delighted with it. I'm wondering if Vivien Leigh would say of her husband-to-be as Hogan says the former Mrs. Wyndham Lewis wrote of her husband Disraeli, that he was conceited where she was not; effervescent when she was calm; dependable; she was flighty; he a genius, she a dunce; ill-humored, she was pleasant; he warm in love but cold in friendship; whereas she was cold in love but warm in friendship. Will Vivien consider this perfect casting? All we can do is wait, watch and report.

HOPPER

Speaking of Olivier, did you know that h almost became an American film idol two years before "Wuthering Heights?" When Marlene Dietrich did "Knight Without Armor" in England, Robert Donat was ill and they begged Olivie to take his place. Olivier, not wanting to cross Donat, drove out to the country to see if he was going to step out. The answer was "No!" So Laurence declined the part; that's what I call loyalty!

War or no war, the English sit. And right now Queen Elizabeth is sitting in Buckingham Palace for Augustus John, who's painting her. I came across a letter writen by John in which he said: "Francis Taylor is taking my beloved drawings and things to America, many of which I tore up in a fit of madness. But he's pieced them together again." M. Taylor has most of them in Hollywood, where they're selling like hot cakes . . .

Likely picture-stealer in "Down Went McGinty" is Akim Tamiroff—a former student of Maria Ouspenskaya's who came over here with the Moscow Art Players back in 1923. Since doing Napoleon's gunner in "The Buccaneer" he's been one of my favorite actors, and for the last year he's been one of our busiest, doing seven pictures and going from one to the other. Talking about "Union Pacific" Akim said: "It took me three months to learn to swing a bull-whip. You can't make a mistake with that weapon. But it was wonderful how brave Brian Donlevy was. He stood perfectly still while I cracked a cigar out of his mouth." "Brave?" grinned Brian, "I wasn't brave—I was numb—couldn't have moved if I'd wanted to. But it wasn't the whip that sickened me—it was that cigar I smoked." And here all the while I thought it was his suit which was so loud even Bing Crosby's horses ran from him and they're used to checks big as granite building blocks.

Enroute East, Bill Boyd and wife, Grace Bradley, stopped off a few hours in Des Moines, where Bill got the jolt of his life. Discovered he's virtually lost his identity because he's played "Hopalong Cassidy" so long. A youngster approached, asked for his autograph, which Bill gave. "Why don't ya give us yer real name?" asked the boy suspiciously. Bill assured him the signature was bona fide. And with that he got a withering look and "I thought you wuz Hopalong Cassidy!"

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 31 (DS).—Warners have always been more successful in developing their own stars than women with the notable exception of Bette Davis. And now it begins to look as if Merle Oberon will be another exception for they're talking long-term contract to her. She has been given "The House on the Hill," Somerset Maugham's "The Villia on the Hill," which ran serially in one of the current magazines. This story was originally purchased for Bette Davis, just as "We Shall Meet Again," was intended for her but Bette cannot do all the pictures and so Merle is being groomed as another high-powered star.

LOUELLA PARSONS

I inquired about the Olivia De Havilland battle when I was out on the Warner lot and I was told that Olivia is still suspended. Come on, now, boys, hasn't she been punished enough? You can't go on being mad all your lives.

Barbara Hutton Haugwitz-Reventlow's granddad, F. W. Woolworth, who made his money through the famous five-and-dime stores, is being immortalized by having his life made into a movie. John Winkler and Boyden Sparks have written it for a current magazine and Edward G. Robinson, who read the galley proofs in New York, became extremely interested. Woolworth's life was really an Horatio Alger romance. He started working when he was very young as an underpaid clerk and amassed a great fortune. He made the money in America and that's what makes Barbara's going back on her Uncle Sam so especially sad.

Wonder if Boris Morros couldn't grab the movie rights to "Lysistrata" which was written in 411 B. C., by a wise Greek gentleman called Aristophanes. As a stage play, it was a tremendous hit. Now Morros is trying to persuade Rouben Mamoulian to put his name on a director's contract. Just in case you didn't see "Lysistrata," it's the revolt of the women against the 20-year war in Greece. They refuse to live with their husbands until peace is declared and believe me they end the war. It's topical, of course, and verra, verra naughty, but extermely amusing and, of course, it could undergo expurgation. Morros would like Claudette Colbert, but it's dollars to doughnuts he can't get her.

Chatter in Hollywood: Jane Bryan isn't the only bride to decide she prefers being a Mrs. to being a movie star. Jane said adieu to her career when she married Justin Dart and now comes along blonde Helen Ericson with the same idea. She was really launched on the path to success, having played "light" in "The Blue Bird" and also a role in the sequel to "Hotel for Women." Last week Helen married Philip Berman, wealthy furrier, and now she has decided that married life and a career do not match.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at Random: Jeanette MacDonald suffering from the jitters yesterday after a narrow escape from death. A car sideswiped her car and then turned over three times. The presence of mind of her driver saved her from serious injury; rumor is hot that if Orson Welles returns from New York, where he went yesterday for a broadcast, he will not make that RKO picture. Talk is that all his movie crowd was taken off salary; May Robson, a swell sport, went on the Finnish relief benefit even though she mashed her hand in the door of the Palace Hotel a few minutes before the show; Dolores Del Rio has trained to New York to see the shows and do some shopping. She will be the guest of the Jack Warners although she will not go on to Palm Beach with them; Arleen Whelan, one of my young starlets, went to the President's Ball at Little Rock, Ark.

Lola Lane has bought herself a swank new home in Van Nuys; Dick Foran is back in town from the East where he went to see his father, who was injured in an airplane accident. Gossip persists that he and his socialite bride are not seeing eye to eye. Ruth says the young man with whom she has been dining is her brother and denies serious trouble between herself and Dick; when Ginger Rogers was a strawberry blonde she had her dressing room done in peach and gold. Now that her hair is darker, her color scheme will be Alice blue; Barbara O'Neil, beaued by Jimmy Stewart and John Swope at Earl Carroll's.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Bankhead Hit And New Films On Horizon

'The Little Foxes' At National Monday; Other New Bills

Capitol

"THE SHOP AROUND THE CORNER." Ernst Lubitsch's first directional effort since the hilariously satirical "Ninotchka" costars James Stewart and Margaret Sullavan. It is a gentle comedy woven around the owner and clerks of a leather-goods shop in Budapest and is primarily concerned with two clerks who cannot get along. Frank Morgan is the shop-owner and his fellows in the cast include Joseph Schildkraut, Felix Bressart, Sara Haden and Inez Courtney. The Capitol stage festivities will center in "A Barn Dance." Nan Raye and Maude Davis present their "Inquiring Reporter" as the feature act. Harry Stevens, "That Old Southern Gentleman;" Masters and Rollins, the Eight Melody Men and the Rhythm Rockets are others on the bill. Phyllis Colt, a Washington girl, who made her bow as Kitty Simons, is an added attraction. Opens tomorrow morning.

RKO-Keith's

"THE INVISIBLE MAN RETURNS." Suggested by H. G. Wells' "The Invisible Man," a highly successful film of 1933, this new film features Vincent Price in the title role of a murderer who escapes from prison by a formula known only to a mysterious doctor. Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Nan Grey, John Sutton and Alan Napier are the leading players. The "March of Time's" latest release, "The Republic of Finland," depicts the struggles of the youthful republic to retain its independence. Opens tomorrow morning.

Earle

"THE FIGHTING 69TH." This war drama of the Rainbow Division, costarring James Cagney, Pat O'Brien and George Brent, will continue for another week at the Earle Theater. The late Father Duffy, "Wild Bill" Donovan and the famous Irish regiment for which the film was named motivate the drama's action. Red Skelton, with Edna Stillwell, heads the stage bill which also continues.

Metropolitan

"BRITISH INTELLIGENCE." An espionage story of the Great War, this adventure film continues an engagement begun Tuesday on F street. Boris Karloff and Margaret Lindsay are costarred, with Bruce Lester, Leonard Mudie, Holmes Herbert, Clarence Derwent, Marie Wrixon and Austin Fairman in the cast.

Palace

"GONE WITH THE WIND." The film version of the Civil War story enters its second week on F street tomorrow morning. Clark Gable, Vivien Leigh, Olivia de Havilland and Leslie Howard head the cast. Weekday morning and afternoon seats are unreserved, with showings that start at 9:45 a. m. and 2:45 p. m. Seats for the evening preformances which start at 8 p. m. are reserved. The reserved seat policy also prevails for the Sunday matinees, which start at 2 p. m.

Columbia

"SWANEE RIVER." Don Ameche, Andrea Leeds and Al Jolson have the leading roles in this musical film suggested by the life of Stephen Foster. The Hall Johnson Choir sings several of the early American composer's most famous spirituals. Opens a return F street engagement tomorrow morning.

Little

"CARMEN." The Little's revival of the Charlie Chaplin burlesque of the Bizet opera, filmed in 1917, continues to share the screen with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for another week. Pearl Hauer plays the piano for the silent comedy and Fredric March won the 1932 Academy Award for his performance in the Stevenson story.

Belasco

"OLYMPIA." This film record of the Olympic games held in Berlin opens at the Belasco Theater tomorrow afternoon. Advance reports stress the fact that while this film was made under the supervision of Lent Riefenstahl and originally ran for four hours, its running time has been cut in half and all propaganda has been deleted. A portion of the receipts during the Belasco run are to be donated to the Finnish Relief Fund.

Trans-Lux

"DAD FOR A DAY." A new "Our Gang" comedy will be the central short subject at the newsreel house for the coming week. General Motors' World's Fair exhibit comes to the screen under the title, "The World of 1960." "Winter Playground," describing the glories of Quebec, and "Goofy and Wilbur," a Walt Disney cartoon, are the other supporting subjects of a bill in which the news of the day predominates. Opens tomorrow morning.

Gayety

HINDA WASSAU presents her own show as the new week's burlesque attraction at the Gayety, opening Sunday afternoon. One of burlesque's leading performers, Miss Wassau is supported by a large cast that includes Finder and Rosen, the "Kings of Slapstick;" Jean Mode, Billy "Scratch" Wallace, Loretta Montez, James X. Francis and "Tap" Paige.

Howard

EARL HINES, the sepia "King of the Ivories," leads his nationally known orchestra as the headline attraction of the Howard Theater's vaudeville bill. One of the original swing artists on the air, Hines is further noted for his "hot" recordings, Catherine Perry, melody songstress; Smiles and Smiles, the Speed Kings, Mason and Vigal and the Addison Carey dancers are other stage performers.

Atlas

THE STANLEY SISTERS, fresh from an engagement in George White's "Scandals," will headline the stage bill opening Sunday afternoon at the Atlas Theater. Sir Cecil Alexander, an accomplished pantomimist, is the leading supporting performer. The double-feature screen bill stars the Marx Brothers in "At the Circus" and Edgar Kennedy in "Laugh It Off."

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Jan. 31.

THE MOVIE CENSORS in Pennsylvania cut two speeches from "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," because they concerned miscegenation. The first speech was Douglas,' delivered during his debate with Lincoln. The second speech was Lincoln's reply to Docglas . . . These speeches, however, were restored to the film when the censors were assured that copies can be found in all the history books . . . Max Gordon and Harry Goetz, the producers of the movie, told President Roosevelt about these cuts and the restoration. "Too bad they were restored. It would have been worth a half million in publicity," said Roosevelt. "And I know something about publicity."

CONTRARY TO REPORTS, Orson Welles still is under contract to RKO. George Schaefer, head of RKO, has promised Welles that he will suspend RKO's advertisements for 2 months in any trade paper which publishes an inaccuracy about Orson . . . When Sinclair Lewis delivered the manuscript of the introduction he's written for "The Good Old Days"—a history of America as seen through the eyes of the Sears, Roebuck catalog—he sighed: "The Good Old Days—before I ever heard of the Theater!"

WHEN "Life With Father" played its command performance in Washington, the authors inserted for that one performance a line which had been eliminated from the play—the line in which Clarence Day complains "It looks to me like those fellas down in Washington don't want any one to make any money" . . . Mrs. Day later presented to the President the first bound volume of the play. He said "Fine. I'll get some lines out of this for my speeches."

LARRY ROBINSON, the 7-year-old redhead in "Life With Father," was permitted to stay up long past his bed time when he accompanied the cast to the White House after the performance. All night long he questioned Mrs. Roosevelt about matters he thought she ought to know—questions like: "What kind of uniforms did the soldiers wear in the War of 1812?" And Eleanor was stumped . . . When the cast was ushered into the dining room Mrs. Roosevelt eased their nervousness by suggesting: "Everybody sit down where you want to. But save a place for me somewhere."

JOHN L. LEWIS, JR., refused to issue any statement as to whether he supports his father's declaration about labor and the New Deal. . . . Robert Ardrey, who wrote "Thunder Rock," the Group Theater play, has been assigned to write the scenario for Christopher Morley's "Kitty Foyle" . . . Benny Fields and Will Bradley's orchestra will open at the Famous Door, on W. 52, for a six-week engagement . . . Hedy Lamarr has left only one beauty hint for night-club patrons during her visit here. "Drink orange juice," she decrees, "but don't let any one strain it. Drink it straight."

LAURITZ MELCHIOR and Kirsten Flagstad, who last week announced their inability to perform in Wagnerian operas while Erich Leinsdorf conducts, have faced more difficult problems without complaint . . . Melchior now confesses that last year during a performance of "Tristan and Isolde" he suddenly called to Miss Flagstad . . . She recognized the emergency and, for the first time in the history of that opera, Isolde crossed the stage to Tristan and started to embrace him—without a gesture of response. The greatest love match in the history of opera suddenly became a one-sided affair. For Melchior's suspender buttons had snapped. If he moved he would have lost his pants.

THE NEW YORK CITY Information Center will feature a new exhibit. It will be a civil service automatic rating machine and all contestants will be able to see just how their papers are marked . . . 25 cent pieces now floating through Yorkville's beer halls have been stamped with the Swastika . . . George Washington High School's delegate to the American Youth Congress convention is named Schmidt. His platoon bears the tag: "Mr. Schmidt Goes to Washington"

Congressional Club Board Honors Mrs. Burke at Surprise Luncheon

130 Assembled To Greet President Of Organization

Mrs. Edward R. Burke, wife of Senator Burke, of Nebraska, and president of the Congressional Club, composed of wives of members of Congress, was honored yesterday at a surprise luncheon given by the board in appreciation of her work in connection with the building program recently completed.

Taken to the clubhouse, New Hampshire avenue and V street, for what she thought was to be a small luncheon given by one of her friends, she found 130 members gathered to greet her. She was genuinely surprised and pleased by the tribute of their presence. It was the first luncheon sponsored by the board since the completion of the new clubhouse addition including the kitchen and dining room adjoining the ballroom on the second floor.

The Marine orchestra was playing as the guest of honor was escorted upstairs and everything from the music to the place cards and flowers had been planned to make the occasion festive.

Etching of Clubhouse On Place Cards

The design of the place cards was an etching, a copy of a drawing of the clubhouse, done on parchment in the form of a shield with eagle wings at either side, which was presented to Mrs. Burke as the inside cover of a hand-made leather notebook. The drawing was done by Louis Justement, architect of the clubhouse, and below it was the inscription: "Presented to Mrs. Edward R. Burke by the Congressional Club for efficient effort and unselfish service—1940."

The notebook, for which it formed the inside of the front cover just a week ago, was Arizona cowhide. When the board members decided on the book cover rather than a frame as a suitable setting for the parchment, a telegram was sent to Mrs. Rachel Murdock Ellis, of Phoenix, daughter of Mrs. John R. Murdock, a member of the board, asking her to make the book. She is expert in leather work, even doing the dyeing herself. The order was promptly executed and the handsome book of wine-red leather arrived by plane in time for presentation at the luncheon. On the front, "Burke" is inscribed in gold and, on the back, "1940."

The presentation was made by Mrs. Finis Garrett, formerly of Tennessee, a charter member, in the name of the club.

Mrs. Murdock presided over the program. Mrs. Horace M. Towner, head of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association and former president of the club, reviewed its history and recalled the officers and members who have had a part in promoting its growth. Mrs. Clarence Lea, of California, long a member, expressed the club's appreciation of Mrs. Burke's work as president, particularly the weeks she spent in the Capital during the hottest part of last summer, overseeing details in connection with the building of the clubhouse addition.

Rep. Harve Tibbott Presented as Soloist

Mrs. Murdock presented as soloist of the occasion representative Harve Tibbott, of Pennsylvania, whose barytone voice justifies the question he often is obliged to answer: "Are you any relation to Lawrence Tibbett?" Not that he knows of, he says, although far back the family trees trace to the same sections of France and Wales.

Yesterday Representative Tibbott, one of Congress' few singers, was heard in two numbers, "The Hills of Home" by Fox and "The Builder" by Cadman, with a member of the Marine Orchestra accompanying him. Mrs. Tibbott, a member of the club, was among the luncheon guests.

Several of those who would otherwise have been present at the affair were unable to attend because of the luncheon at the White House at which they were guests. Among them were Mrs. Norris, wife of Senator Norris of Nebraska, and Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, wife of Representative Reed of New York, and immediate past president of the club.

The committee for the luncheon arrangements included Mrs. R. Ewing Thomason of Texas and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, in charge of the flowers, for the table, which were later presented to Mrs. Burke; Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota and Mrs. Clyde H. Smith, of Maine, in charge of the tables and place cards; Mrs. Robert F. Rich, of Pennsylvania, the music; Mrs. Clarence Hancock, of New York, the reception of guests, and Mrs. Murdock, of the program.

Red Skelton and Wife Honor Guests At Luncheon of Soroptimist Club

YESTERDAY the Soroptimist Club had as honor guests at its luncheon at the Willard, Red Skelton and his wife, Edna Stilwell, who are appearing at the Earle this week. They were presented by Elinor Lee, the program chairman, and Mr. Skelton entertained with impersonations.

The luncheon was also to have been a party, honoring Mrs. Caroline B. Stephen, who will celebrate her seventy-fourth birthday on Saturday. Indisposed for a few days with the popular influenza, Mrs. Stephens received the gifts and flowers at home instead and will cut a birthday cake later, Miss Mary Bourke, the president, announced.

She is a past president of the club and one of its most beloved members. She also belongs to the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Business and Professional Women's Club and the P. E. O. Sisterhood, and is vice president of the Women's Guild of Central Union Mission, which is her pet charity. She is best known as president of the Temple Secretarial School.

Mrs. Stephen, who makes her home with her sister, Miss Elizabeth Thompson, 1615 Hobart street, is a native of South Carolina. From there her parents went to Kansas and then came to Washington, where she was a member of the first graduating class of Central High School in 1883.

She then attended Columbia College, now George Washington University and later took a business course and did secretarial work. Lafayette Temple engaged her to teach business courses in his school, and when he grew restless for larger fields, he persuaded her to take over the school. She has been there since and has incorporated the institution with two younger partners. Her hardest job now, her friends say, is thwarting their efforts to make her stay away from the school at least 12 hours out of every 24.

She knits but "not well enough to inflict it on the Finns." She is much addicted to contract bridge and will play any time anywhere. She has had to give up golf. Has no ambitions to live to be 100 years old but suspects that she may do so. She goes to the theater and concerts whenever she can, and reads herself to sleep every night.

DELPHIAN LUNCHEON—The Columbia Chapter of the Delphian Society yesterday was entertained at its annual luncheon by the president, Mrs. H. D. Linton, 1510 Crittenden street.

Big Day for Capitalites With 2 Cabinet 'At Homes' and Reception for Wertzes

Large Turnouts for Parties by Mrs. Jackson And Mrs. Ickes and for Mrs. Willy Hopkins' Fete for New Interior Undersecretary and Wife

By Hope Ridings Miller.

TEA-TIME yesterday found scores of Capitalites out and about as two Cabinet "at homes," a reception in honor of the new Undersecretary of the Interior and Mrs. Alvin J. Wirtz, and a number of smaller parties went off on schedule.

HOPE R. MILLER

Biggest gathering of the afternoon took place in the apartment of the new Attorney General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, when the latter observed her first "at home" since her husband's appointment.

From 4 to 6 p. m. and even afterward, a continuous line of callers filed into the drawing room to greet the hostess and to enjoy her party. Receiving informally, she was becomingly gowned in dark green crepe, made on simple lines and trimmed with a gold collar. Standing with her was Mrs. Francis Biddle, wife of the new Solicitor General, who is already widely known in Washington. Mrs. Biddle's handsome frock of floor-length black velvet was accented with three horizontal stripes—cerise, green and purple—around the sleeves and bodice.

The flower-decked dining room table has guests surrounding it three-deep for well over two hours. When I dropped by for a cup of tea, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, in a smart blue ensemble, and Mrs. Francis Shea, wearing a brown suit with a matching hat, were pouring. Mrs. Thurman Arnold, whose red-trimmed turban was a gay splash of color in the throng, was generally assisting, as were Mrs. Samuel O. Clark and Mrs. James W. Morris.

Mrs. Justin Miller had just finished her round of duties and was leaving, as she and Justice Miller were to have guests for dinner. Others who assisted during the afternoon included Mrs. John O. Rogge, Mrs. Newman A. Townsend, Mrs. Matthew McGuire, Mrs. James V. Bennett, Mrs. Gordon Dean and Mrs. Frank Wideman.

Several Hundred Notables Present

Listing who was there is a bit like turning page after page of the Congressional Directory, the Social Register and the Diplomatic Blue Book. To mention but a few whom I saw in the throng—there were the Canadian Minister, Lording Christie; the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison, the latter wearing a snappy little polka-dot hat perched becomingly on the side of her head and matching her scarf; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Albert L. Cox; Mrs. Henry F. Grady, garbed in dark red, leaving with Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck and Mrs. Basil Manly; Mrs. James Slattery, chatting with Mrs. Bruce Smith, who returned yesterday from Coral Gables and will be in her Mayflower apartment for a few days before going back to Florida.

Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, was there, and other members of the diplomatic contingent included Mme. Horinouchi, wife of the Japanese Ambassador; Mme. Bianchi, wife of the Portuguese Minister; Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Minister; Mme. Hurban, wife of the Czechoslovak Minister, and Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Soviet Ambassador.

Lady Leslie was among the guests, as were Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, Baron and Baroness von Pagenhardt, Mrs. Eugene Woodson, Dr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, Mrs. Bruce Wallace, Mrs. Edgar Goodrich, Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. J. Fred Essary, and Mrs. Henry D. Flood, who later went on to the small tea given by Mrs. Carlton Holdrege.

Pleasant Party At Headwaters Farm

As is always the case when more than one Cabinet hostess is receiving, scores of callers make the rounds; so yesterday afternoon you saw many of the same faces at both Mrs. Jackson's reception and the one given by Mrs. Harold L. Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior. Headwaters Farm, the Ickes home near Olney, Md., was never lovelier than in its snowy setting yesterday; and inside the "Gone With the Wind" atmosphere of its spacious high-ceilinged rooms was enhanced by an open fire and huge vases and bowls of spring blossoms.

The hostess was trimly turned out in a black velvet frock with gold accents. Among those alternating at the tea table was Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, who was hatless and wore a black frock trimmed with a lace collar and cuffs. Mrs. John O. Herrick, also assisting, wore a plum-colored frock with a matching hat; and Miss Pauletta Guffey's costume featured a black frock, trimmed in gold and a black turban drawn with gold threads. Others in the house party included Mrs. Claude Pepper, Mrs. Howard Gray, Mrs. T. V. Smith, Mrs. Hugh Petersin and Mrs. Michael Straus.

More Congressional hostesses than one usually sees collected under one roof turned out for Mrs. Ickes' party, and a number of official and diplomatic ladies were also noted in the crowd.

Meanwhile, back in town the Undersecretary of the Interior and Mrs. Wirtz were meeting around 150 guests who atended the reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Welly K. Hopkins, the former of whom is a special assistant to the Attorney General.

The Carlton room of the Carlton Hotel was the scene of the reception, which got under way at 5 p. m., and was still going strong a couple of hours later. The host and hostess and their guests of honor received in the north drawing room, later going on in to join the company around the tea table.

Mrs. Hopkins was gowned in a floral printed satin, made on softly draped lines; while Mrs. Wirtz had chosen a dark red crepe frock, trimmed in wide fringe and worn with an exquisite diamond necklace.

Texas talk circulated freely through the crowd, as many of those present hailed from the Lone Star State. Before the party was over, in fact, it took on a certain semblance of old home week.

Cohen and Corcoran Among the Guests

The long tea table fairly groaned beneath its outlay of tea time dainties, its tall center vase sprouting with spring blossoms and flanked with clusters of white tapers in silver candelabra, and its two low bouquets at either end.

Among those taking turns pouring or generally assisting were Mrs. Lyndon Johnson, Mrs. George F. Shea, wearing a purple frock set off with metallic accents and a cluster of white orchids; Mrs. Earl E. Houck, whose dark red hat and black frock were most becoming; Mrs. James V. Bennett and Mrs. Gordon Dean, who assisted earlier at the Jackson party; Mrs. Sam E. Whitaker, Mrs. Aubrey Williams, Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, Mrs. Oscar M. Powell, Mrs. Arthur Goldschmidt, Mrs. F. H. Whitaker and Mrs. Henry Schweinhart.

Benjamin Cohen and Thomas Cochran, whose partying appearances are few and far between, were among those seen in the crowd, which filled the Carlton room by 6 o'clock. Mrs. Morris Sheppard, wearing a smart gray ensemble, was there, as were Mrs. Richard Kleberg, Mr. and Mrs. Mastin G. White, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Jones, Homer S. Cummings, and many others, including Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hagy, of Amarillo, Tex., who are staying at the Mayflower during their Washington visit.

With Dudley Harmon

Eve Curie to Arrive Today for Visit To Embassy and Lecture Before Society

EVE CURIE, one of those very rare people who combine glamour with brains, will arrive in town today for a stay at the French Embassy. The Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin, has planned a luncheon for her tomorrow, though grippe may keep him away from his party. Tomorrow evening she will lecture on the work Frenchwomen are doing since the war before members of the National Geographic Society.

No stranger to Washington, Mlle. Curie has been entertained here by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and by Polish Ambassador Potocki. Everybody always wants to fete this attractive Frenchwoman, and among distinguished New Yorkers who have given parties for her are Gov. and Mrs. Herbert Lehman, Conde Nast and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Luce.

ONE OF THE ten best-dressed women in Paris, the daughter of the famous scientist, wears hats by Suzy, day clothes by Schiaparelli, and evening dresses from Chanel. Despite that she believes that American designers lead the field when it comes to sport clothes.

Mlle. Curie makes up for a rather solitary childhood by taking a leading part in the elegant life of Paris. Her first memories of her mother are of a woman dressed in deep mourning who every day took an early train into Paris, where she gave at the university the only course in radioactivity in the world.

Now on a lecture tour of the U. S., Mlle. Curie is speaking in numerous cities from here to Los Angeles. The day after she stepped off the boat in New York, about a month ago, she was received at city hall by Mayor LaGuardia.

Novelist Louis Bromfield once wrote that Eve Curie reminded him of "falling snow" and "had everything."

Overheard at the headquarters of the Republican National Committee:

"I have to go out in the country to dinner tonight," said a woman, "and I don't see how I can get there as I haven't a car."

"How divine," gurgled another woman, this one from Philadelphia, "to keep only horses!"

IT TAKES ONLY a slight thaw to bring out spring bonnets along about this time of year. There were several noted yesterday afternoon when the Thrift Shop Committee of the Junior League met at the clubhouse to discuss their work over a cup of tea.

Among those planning further accomplishments for their favorite charity were Barbara Bradley, Mrs. F. E. Galloway, Mrs. Alfred Hand, Mrs. Bishop Hill, Mrs. Bowman MacArthur, Mrs. Roger M. McCullough, Mrs. Matt Meyer, Mrs. Richard White Miller, Cassie Parker, Mrs. John J. Pringle, jr., Elizabeth Shouse, Mrs. Sherwood B. Smith, Mrs. Edwin H. Somers, Mrs. W. N. Sturtevant, Mrs. James W. Watts and Mrs. Robert F. Wilson.

Mrs. Bishop Hill is chairman of the committee which sorts and prices the articles brought in, and Barbara Bradley heads the league group which sells them to benefit the Thrift Shop. Proceeds then go to the several Washington hospitals and the league.

PARTY NOTES: Mrs. Adolph C. Miller gave a luncheon yesterday for Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, of Boston . . . Mrs. Thomas Parran, wife of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, will do the same today for Mrs. George Ruhland, wife of the District health officer . . . Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln O'Brien have cards out for a dinner on Saturday, February 10, at the Sulgrave Club.

Mary Haworth's Mail

For 10 Years, Man Has Courted Girl Who Is Afraid Of Marriage; Is There Argument To Win Her Over?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a fine young woman for over ten years. I love her dearly and she cares for me, but she is afraid of marriage. But don't you think she should try to feel differently about married life? She makes a good salary and therefore doesn't have to marry for support, but if she cares enough for me to go with me this long, don't you think she could be happy as my wife? Perhaps you can tell me how to persuade her. DOWN HEARTED.

DEAR DOWN HEARTED: No doubt the lady could find happiness as your wife, supposing she were once intelligently committed to the great adventure. But since she is obstinately set against marriage, it is unlikely that we can talk her into double harness. She is in somewhat the position of a person who is afraid to swim (having heard of many deaths by drowning), and proves it by never setting foot in a pool.

Such a person can only master his unreasoning dread by matching his skill and courage against the fearsome element. In the case of the swimmer, it would mean deliberately developing the techniques necessary for exploring the pleasures and benefits of water sports. Much the same approach should be employed by the person who fears the intimacy of marriage, because he has seen (or heard of) individuals coming to grief in that field of human relationships.

Fear is usually synonymous with ignorance, as you might tell your girl friend; and that person is a poor creature who lets his life be cramped by ignorance. But even more to be censured, perhaps, is the person who lets his life be spoiled by another's ignorance, as you seem to be doing in this instance.

Since the girl continues doggedly, after 10 years' patient courtship, to put you off, I think you should wash your hands of the futile relationship and turn elsewhere in search of a wife. If you were to confront her with an ultimatum, to-wit: "marry me now or lose my company forever," there is a possibility that she would overcome her fears in an astonishing hurry. I advise you to try it. M. H.

Follow These Suggestions And Meet Nice Girls

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Here are some specific suggestions for the young man, aged 32, who asked, through your column of January 25, "how to get acquainted with the better educated and more refined" young women of the community.

1. Get himself included in social gatherings of the "Little Congress." The congressional secretaries, en masse, are the most attractive, best groomed young women seen in Washington, not excluding the bevies of private school girls one sees at theaters and concerts, nor the girls from the local universities.

2. Join one of the evening extension courses sponsored by the Department of Agriculture. There are classes in all subjects; the fees are small, and there you meet persons of all ages and degrees of intelligence and education.

3. Attend meetings of the different branches of the Department of Agriculture's recreational association. The program includes bowling, dancing, music, etc., and is popular with college-trained Government workers from all over the Nation. It attracts the younger crowd, mostly in their twenties.

4. As a special student at George Washington University, even for one course, he would be eligible to participate in the college dances, basketball games, etc. where he might meet college girls who attend morning classes; the girls who are non-wage earners, who stay at home, lead a normal social life, are subsidized by their parents, etc.—evidently the type he has in mind.

5. He might enroll as a law student at Southeastern University, where he will find some very pretty girls, and where romances have been known to develop. Or he could take in some of the dances arranged by the Gallinger Hospital nurses and student nurses. Although not college graduates, they are charming and intelligent girls.

Finally, since he is already 32, I suggest that "B. F. B." choose a wife who combines charm with the ability to earn money (in a pinch) after marriage. His salary of approximately $200 a month is a meager income for a cultured, highly educated young couple to rear a family on—in Washington, D. C. Very truly yours, N. N. C.

Baby, 15 Days Old, Needs Bed and Clothes

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am writing to ask if you know anybody who has a baby crib or carriage they would let me have for my baby. She is only 15 days old and has no place of her own to sleep. She is so tiny that I am afraid she may be hurt. I don't have any clothes for her, either. She needs things so very badly, and the house is so cold I am afraid she may get sick. I can't buy clothes for her; we have just barely enough to buy her milk. My husband is out of work and looking for a job, and when he finds it (or I get stronger) we would gladly repay any favors, either in work or money. I am hoping you will try to help us for the baby's sake. Gratefully yours, MRS. M. G.

Kind Readers Surely Will Rise to Emergency.

DEAR MRS. M. G.: I am publishing your letter in the hope that it will come to the attention of some kind reader who has a baby crib or carriage, and perhaps a supply of outgrown baby clothes, which she would be happy to give to your baby. Every mother will appreciate your acute anxiety for the baby's safety, comfort and health—which prompts you to put aside pride and ask help in her name. (And the lady's address, dear readers, is 727 Second street northeast, Washington, D. C., if you will be so good as to communicate directly with her). M. H.

Picture Book Prettiness in Silk

With first nights, horse shows and formal parties all taking over Washington, local beauties are vying with each other over the loveliness of their evening gowns. For those of advanced tastes we present this new spring dance gown of white silk chiffon spattered with clear red and blue flowers enclosed in shell motifs. A corsage of garden flowers picks up the tricolor motif of the gently flaring train and graceful scarf treatment outlining the low cut decolletage

Fight Colds by Keeping Up Resistance

Vitamin A Foods Should Be Eaten In Quantities

By Ida Jean Kain

THE QUICKEST way to catch a cold is to be around someone who is getting one. Probably the main reason colds are so common is that the contagious stage occurs long before you begin sniffing and sneezing. How can you tell when anyone—including yourself—is coming down with one?

The answer is you can't. And, furthermore, there is no guarantee that anything you can do will make you immune. But you can keep your resistance up so that you are not such an easy prey for every cold bug that comes your way. And you can do that by following well-balanced menus, getting plenty of rest, and taking a few precautions.

If you are susceptible to colds, step up the vitamin A content of your diet. It has been proved beyond any doubt that vitamin A is a very important factor in general health and vigor. Besides, this is the vitamin credited with improving the health of the membranes of the respiratory tract.

Exercise in fresh air puts you in trim

Vitamin A Foods

Foods rich in A are whole milk, cream, butter, green and yellow vegetables, and egg yolks. But you might benefit by the use of a supplemental concentrate—cod liver, halibut or haliver oil. The reducer—whose menus are necessarily restricted in dairy products—may find the concentrates an invaluable dietary supplement during the "cold season." In capsule form, these contain no calories and will not interfere with weight loss, yet they reinforce the diet with one of the most important protective elements.

Vitamin C is another element essential to the maintenance of a high level of positive health. And recently its healing properties have been stressed. Be sure that your daily menus include at least one citrus fruit (and the more the better) and one raw vegetable, such as cabbage,

Cod Liver Oil May Supplement Regular Diet

Avoid Crowds

There are one or two other precautions which may help you to escape a cold. For one thing, try to avoid crowds. For another, see that your house is not too hot or the air too dry. You catch cold much more easily in an overheated place than in one which is cool and which has a circulation of fresh air. With the furnace going full blast, you must make sure that there is enough moisture in the air.

But after you catch cold, don't try to prove how rugged you are! Go to bed. If you can stay in bed for a day or two, your cold is not nearly so likely to hang on. Drink plenty of water and don't go on the theory that you are supposed to starve a fever and feed a cold! A light diet for you; Stick to soups and plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mother's Room Should Have Friendly, Informal Atmosphere

Should Stress Comfort and Invite Confidences; Plenty of Inviting Places to Sit Are Necessary; Color Scheme Should Emphasize Cheer

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

FOR all we put of time and thought making the whole house as livable as possible, it's usually "mother's room" that's the center of things. Maybe because, it's apt to be a friendly big room that invites hours of confidences and comfort.

One of the most successful rooms of this type that we know is the least pretentious. But it reflects so genially the personality of mother. The furniture is maple in a pale honey tone, rich with years of waxing; and the rug is in a soft shade of light green. A pale green leafy patterned paper for the walls, crisply ruffled white dotted Swiss curtains at the windows, a delft blue tufted bedspread and a delft blue slip cover for an old sofa completes the color scheme. That's an unusual combination and yet very tranquil, especially in such a sunny room as this. Accent is provided by lamps with yellow pottery bases, yellow flowered chintz sofa cushions and a yellow and white afghan for the blue sofa, and in season there are always lovely sheaves of yellow flowers in copper bowls.

The real secret of the room is in its comfort—in the fact that there are plenty of good places to sit; the old sofa we mentioned is a popular lounging spot—and the bed comes in for its share. And there are a pair of little Boston rockers that have such a lot of comfort in such light small frames. No wonder the whole family parks here 'till they're shoveled out.

In addition to being a comfortable room, it's interesting, for mother is quite a reader and always has her book shelves filled with good books. And father always sees to it that the radio here is in tip-top form. Besides he always keeps a jar of Spanish peanuts on the big lamp table and the whole family likes to dip in.

Not enough privacy, you say? Well, maybe so, but after all most parents are crabbing because they don't see enough of their children. So if there's a big and pleasant room in the house where they like to congregate, better feel flattered, lady dear; it means that you have a magic hand at homemaking—don't worry because you never have a minute to yourself. Too soon they'll all fly away and you'll have far too many minutes. Treasure them now in a little box of jewel jade to take out in years to come and enjoy again.

The Departing Crowds

I

They come from the concert:
Where they have been listening to the universal language of mankind,
The language that draws all living creatures—even the beasts—
Together in spirit; the language that mellows the mind,
That thaws the icy barriers of the heart; that expands the thought
Out of its narrow rivulets of self into a broad river of understanding:
And yet they come preening themselves in their minks and their ermines,
Suspiciously appraising each other, impatiently regarding
Drab mortals from a commoner world who impede their progress,
Elbowing others aside to get to their cabs or their carriages,
Their faces wooden, their eyes narrowed over the petty concerns that await them,
And exuding the self satisfaction of those who have made their due contribution to Culture.

II

They come from the lecture:
Where they have been listening to words of profundity, reason,
Of warning, foresight and perspective; words of enlightenment
To point a way out of chaos, to hold back the press of the jungle,
Words that blaze forth a challenge to objective thought, calm cooperation
To bring about order and peace, to give pattern to living;
And yet they come apathetically engrossed in their own little egos, Placidly thinking, "Me and mine are all safe, so what does it matter?
"There's no danger at hand, and so many small things are crowding,
"And what is there next week at the movies? And should I get a new hat,
"Or wait until later? . . . Oh to be out of crowds! And who are these people,
"Pushing so rudely ahead and usurping my place? . . . Well, I will show them!"

III

They come from the church:
Where they have been listening to a man of God expound his message,
Of human brotherhood; where they have been worshiping a Power
Whose essence is Beauty, Love Joy, Hope that's triumphant,
Yet they come with eyes unlighted, faces sodden and earthy,
Some with the shrewd look of a miser who has made his weekly deposit
In a bank, and thinks smugly, "I for one am secure for the future,"
Some with the relieved countenances of having performed tiresome duties.
Others stepping proudly in their finery with Pharisaical looks toward the dowdy;
Why do they not come as those descending from a high mountain,
With faces transfigured, as those who have just witnessed a vision,
And for the moment are following the gleam in a world that is darkened?

Maple and Apples

A few drops of maple flavoring gives a new note to apple pie. Mix the flavoring right in with the sugar. Maple is very good, too, put into whipped cream used for topping baked or steamed puddings.

Window Garden Is Springlike

HOW cheerful, prophetic of spring is a window garden!

Easily you can make one by putting up an inexpensive glass shelf, grouping flowering and foliage plants so the sunlight filters through them in fairy-like effect.

What if your window has only a few hours of sun? Many plants will grow happily there.

Periwinkle and peperomia will trail gracefully in bracket pots attached to your window. On your shelf put a pair of purple African violets, a yellow Buttercup Primrose. And on your window ledge let rosy-flowered beefsteak begonias flank a bowl of fragrant lilies-of-the-valley.

The primrose, violets and begonias like moisture, but the African violet detests water on its leaves.

Imported lily-of-the-valley pips if started now should bloom within a few weeks. Put them in a shallow dish with just enough water to cover the spread-out roots. The pips themselves should rise above the water—and, for luxuriant bloom, keep them warm, cover with a paper cone to shut out the light till the leaves are 3 inches tall.

Thrilling, too, this time of the year to force branches from flowering trees and shrubs such as forsythia. Choose short branches with lots of flower buds, cut on a slant and put in water in a deep container. Set where air is warm and moist.

And how about starting a terrarium of gay little foliage and flowering plants? Our 40-page booklet, SUCCESS WITH HOUSE PLANTS AND FLOWERS, has complete directions for making terrariums and dish gardens.

First Lady Would Plan Humans, Too

She Speaks at Dinner Of Civic Association; Committee of 100 Outlines Program

Although Mrs. Roosevelt is proud of Washington's beauty, she sometimes wishes—she said last night—that the city had a board "as interested in planning about human beings as about parks."

The First Lady was speaking at a "Federal City dinner," given at the Willard Hotel by the American Planning and Civic Association, with members of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission as honor guests.

She was presented to the audience of more than 250 city planners and members of the District committees in Congress by Frederic A. Delano, the President's uncle, who is chairman of the association's board.

All planning that is done to improve parks, however, Mrs. Roosevelt declared, "is important to human beings." She would not like to see such planning curtailed, but expressed the hope it "will gradually include many things we leave out at present."

"You have given me a great deal of pleasure as an individual through what you have done here in Washington," she said, "and I hope the Capital City is going to continue to be planning along lines that you have laid down."

Plans Recommended

Ways by which the planners hope to keep up their beautification of Washington were given in recommendations of the association's committee of 100 on the Federal City, read by Charles F. Consaul, vice chairman. They included:

Extension of supervision of architecture to cover the design of private buildings. It was recommended that this be done by means of an architectural board and "more teeth" in the local architects registration law.

A speeding up of the public building program, not only as a means of providing the city with creditable public buildings but as a means of "spreading traffic flow over a larger area."

Direction of attention to Pennsylvania avenue, "in the hope that some means may be devised to make it one of the most distinguished streets in America."

"Continued pressure to realize plans" for the George Washington Memorial Parkway, for which 2,000 of the planned 7,000 acres have been acquired.

Use of Gas Tax

Use of the gas tax for the building and maintenance of parkways, as well as other thoroughfares.

Continued cooperation with the Board of Education, in an effort to speed the school building program, to insure an assembly-gymnasium for each school, and to see that sufficient playground sites are developed.

Adequate control of population density for various sections of the city.

Development of East Capitol street, "which connecting with the Anacostia Parkway, will offer a new approach to Washington."

Delano Praised

Horace M. Albright, association president, paid tribute to Delano's quarter century of work in behalf of the Federal City and defended the planning scheme behind Washington buildings.

"Better copy designs of buildings which have lived than to make the Capital a museum of designs which may be as funny in 2000 as atrocities of the 80's are today," he declared—presumably in answer to the recent charge by an architectural group that the city is filled with "slavish copies of a dead past."

Special guests at the dinner included Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee; Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee; Senator Arthur Capper; Judge Louis C. Crampton, former District committee member, and Col. U. S. Grant 3d.

Boy, 6, Seriously Hurt When Sled Collides With Car

A 6-year-old boy was injured seriously last night when his sled skidded against an automobile and a District man was hurt in a collision at an icy intersection.

ROBERT

Robert Schrader, of 2213 Douglas street northeast, suffered a double jaw fracture, fractures of the upper bones of the face and a possible skull fracture when his sled collided with an automobile at Twenty-fourth and Evart streets northeast. He was taken for first aid to Dr. R. W. Conklin, of 3100 Twentieth street northeast, by Thomas J. Barnes, 51, who police said was driving the automobile. Later the boy was removed by ambulance to Casualty Hospital.

In a two-car collision at Nichols avenue and Sumner road southeast, Bernard L. Karlinsky, 22, of 4921 Fourth street northeast, received injuries of the head and hand. He refused hospital treatment.

Fire Record

Fire alarms sounded yesterday and last night were:

Villard Believes 'Total War' Can Be Stopped Before It Starts

Coalition Advocates 5-Year Suspension Of Immigration

Roosevelt, Pope, 8 Neutrals Might Bring Peace, He Contends

The American Coaljtion, a federation of 114 societies dedicated to "keeping America American," yesterday urged suspension of all immigration into the United States for five years.

Four hundred delegates from a score of States attended the coalition's one-day annual convention at the Willard Hotel.

The coalition adopted resolutions calling for withdrawal of American diplomats from Russia, praising the Dies Committee, and expressing "emphatic opposition to the Government of the United States taking cognizance of internal policies of foreign governments which do not directly affect the interests of the citizens of our country."

Member groups of the coalition include the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation, Daughters of the Defenders of America, American War Mothers, General Society of Mayflower Descendants, Old Glory Association, Order of Colonial Lords of Manors in America, Order of Independent Americans, Inc., and the Tax Evils Committee, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, addressing the luncheon session of the convention, attacked "the concept that the role of the United States is to defend 'right' against 'wrong' everywhere in the world."

He warned against allowing "our natural sympathies for certain belligerents, our natural abhorrence of tyranny and war lust and persecutions by dictators, to draw us into the maelstrom of European politics and European conflicts."

Senator Rufus Holman (Republican), of Oregon, opened his speech by remarking, "Ever since I came to the East out of the West I have been longing for an opportunity to speak to an American audience." He stressed the word "American" and was roundly applauded.

More hand-clapping followed his statement that his mother was "one of the Huntingtons who founded Norwich, Conn., in 1665."

He was cheered for quotations from George Washington, against the third term and entangling alliances, and from Capt. John Smith, who told the Jamestown colonists, "He who will not work shall not eat."

Senator Holman said he hoped to see the day when "Government will go back to our town meetings, city halls and State Capitols and we will no longer get our orders from labor temples and Communist halls."

Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State, presided at the luncheon. John B. Trevor, of Washington, was reelected president of the coalition.

Club Will Honor Coleman Jennings

Plans for presentation February 8 of a distinguished service medal to Coleman Jennings for his work with the Community Chest and his efforts to aid youth in Washington were completed last night by the executive committee of the Cosmopolitan Club.

Grace M. Colliflower, elocutionist, will address the club at its meeting at 12:30 p. m. today in the Carlton Hotel.

300 at Wilson Hear Singers From Ohio

Program Includes Savage Serenade And Cossack March

Operatic music, Negro spirituals, Cossack marching songs, and a savage serenade were sung last night by the glee club of Capital University, of Columbus, Ohio, for an audience of 300 at Wilson Teachers College.

The club is on a ten-day tour of Eastern cities.

The singing of the 33 college youths grew more popular with each number as "Lost Galleons," of the choral cycle of Dimorier and Bornschein, was followed by Tschaikowsky's "Legend of the Christ Child," two Negro spirituals, and the Cossacks' March.

Particularly applauded was a "Varsity Quartet," who mixed a semiclassical "All for You" with a four-line humorous bit bewailing the necessity of study.

During a five-minute intermission the director of the club, who apparently chaperoned the young singers with the care exercised on grand opera prima donnas, could be heard admonishing a group to stay out of that draft."

After a lightning-fingered pianist had reeled off three Chopin sonatas and two big Mendelsshon and the audience brought him back for as many encores, the club swept through a little Jewish folksong.

In a moving climax to the program, the club sang the powerful "Drums of Africa" of Jenkins and Britain, a number built on the rhythms of a savage war dance. As a drum beat offstage, always growing faster in tempo, the singers developed the speed and volume of the overtones to an emotional close.

Irish Minister's Home Is Robbed, Wife Threatened

A colored intruder last night interrupted a crime broadcast at the home of Robert Brennan, minister of Ireland, threatened Mrs. Brennan and her two children with a blackjack and made off with the diplomat's best suit.

Brennan was away when a knock sounded at the door of the home at 1920 Twenty-third street. Mrs. Brennan, thinking it was her husband, opened the door. A colored man with a large mustache forced his way into the room, brandishing a blackjack and muttering, "I don't live in a big house like this."

Mrs. Brennan ran screaming to the second floor, while the burglar dashed into Brennan's room, snatched up a suit and fled.

Draftsman Found Dead in Garage; Car Ignition On

Frederick Robinson Diggs, 49, of 806 Seventeenth street northwest, was found dead in the luggage compartment of his coupe yesterday afternoon by his wife. The ignition was turned on and the gas tank, which had been half full the night before, was empty. Death was believed to have been caused by carbon monoxide.

Diggs was laid off in October by the procurement division of the Treasury Department, where he had worked for four years as an architectural draftsman, his wife, Mrs. Leigh Diggs, 57, said.

Since that time the couple had been living on the income from a small sandwich shop operated by Mrs. Diggs. They have no children.

Brotherhood Installs Officers In Ceremony at Atonement

Greater appreciation and respect for physical Christianity will help man bear the "spiritual load" of life, Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder said last night at Atonement Lutheran Church.

The pastor of Reformation Lutheran Church addressed a pre-Lenten vesper service of the District Lutheran Brotherhood, whose new officers were installed by Martin A. McGrory. He is president of the Maryland Synodical Brotherhood.

Those inducted were Lindley G. Schmidt, St. Paul's Lutheran Church, president; John A. Donaldson, St. Stephen's, vice president; James A. Solt, Atonement, treasurer; Lewis R. Hanson, Luther Place Memorial Church, secretary, and the Rev. M. J. Bieber, pastor of the St. Luke Lutheran Church, Silver Spring, spiritual adviser.

The Rev. Howard E. Snyder, host pastor, led the vespers; Dr. L. M. Zimmerman gave the consecration prayer, and Prof. Emerson Meyers, leader of the Atonement choir, conducted the musical part of the program.

The Brotherhood agreed that the pre-Lenten men's vespers will be held annually on the Friday preceding the beginning of Lent.

$679,000 Low Bid for ADA Project

13 Firms Seek Contract for 203 Dwelling Units In Navy Place

John Ihlder, executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority, yesterday announced the Charles H. Tompkins Co.'s bid of $679,500 as the lowest among 13 for construction of the ADA's Navy place housing project.

In contrast with the Ridge road contract last year, on which bids were so few it was necessary to readvertise, the number of prospective builders for the Navy place development was among the largest ever for a local project.

The contract calls for erection of 203 dwelling units for white tenancy to replace the old shanties, now demolished, which occupied what used to be Washington's largest inhabited alley. The site is bounded by Fifth, Sixth, G and I streets southeast.

Other Washington companies which competed for the contract were Skinker & Garrett, $688,500; Harwood-Nebel Construction Co., $707,000; George Hyman Construction Co., 744,000, and Bahen & Wright, $779,000.

The other bidders are from New York, St. Louis, Malden, Mass., Buffalo, Brooklyn, Baltimore and Lowell, Mass.

The project's 203 dwelling units containing 759 rooms, will be divided among 47 row houses, and one two-story and one three-story apartment buildings.

"Because of the size of the square the architect, Arthur B. Heaton, had a difficult problem in making a plan that would utilize the whole area economically and yet give each dwelling a frontage to the street," said Ihlder. "This problem he solved successfully."

The ADA will study the 13 bids submitted, then make its recommendation to the United States Housing Authority, which has lent 90 per cent of the capital for financing the project. The contract should be awarded in a few days, Ihlder said.

Capital News In Brief

'Samaritan' Robbed

When Miss Beatrice Frankle, 25, a clerk-stenographer for the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation, looked up from her reading in the living room of her apartment at 2123 Eighteenth street northwest last night she saw a strange man standing in a doorway. Blood streamed down his face.

"Oh! Your nose is bleeding. Let me fix it." Miss Frankle, though startled, got up and inspected the man's face.

So Miss Frankle went into the bathroom, got water, antiseptic and absorbent cotton. When she got back, the man was gone. She looked outside and saw him fleeing down the street with her pocketbook and that of her 8-year-old sister, Natalie.

She had just removed $60 from her own purse. Natalie's contained $1.

Isaac Gans Ill, License Is Delayed

Retiring Member Of ABC Board Goes To Hospital on Last Day in Position

With Isaac Gans, member of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, ill at Emergency Hospital, renewal of a license for Leo J. Rossiter, 4132 Georgia avenue northwest, was held up yesterday when the two remaining board members split on the question.

At emergency, Gans' condition was described last night as "satisfactory." Gans, who was to have retired today, was taken to the hospital earlier in the day after a heart attack. He was to have been honored today with a testimonial luncheon at the National Press Club.

Meanwhile, police were checking on all liquor and beer dispensing establishments to see if they displayed the 1940 license in place of the 1939 license, which expired at midnight last night. Though some 150 licensees had not yet received new permits, many were said to be off-sale beer licensees who usually wait until the warmer months to obtain licenses at a lower fee. Thomas E. Lodge, board chairman, said yesterday 1,685 licenses of all types had been issued, as compared with 1,830 last year.

Rossiter's permit was held up when Lodge voted to disapprove its renewal at yesterday's board meeting and Mrs. Agnes E. Mason voted to renew. The question now must be settled by William P. Meredith, former executive secretary of the board, who takes Gans' place today, provided it is decided he may vote after reading testimony of the Rossiter hearing.

Rossiter told the board he had invested $35,000 in remodeling his establishment and loss of his license would result in "hardships." He threatened court action.

Last February he was granted a Class C license, permitting sale of liquor, over the protest of several organizations which appeared at the renewal hearing Monday. Previously he had a Class D license, which permits sale of beer and light wines.

Survey Asked Of Police on Motorcycles

Trinidad Citizens Hold Scout Cars Are More Efficient

The District Commissioners will be asked to survey the value of motorcycles for police work, as compared with scout cars under terms of a resolution adopted last night by the Trinidad Citizens Association, meeting at Wheatley School. In view of the fact that the last four policement to meet violent deaths here were killed on motorcycles, the association held that scout cars were more efficient and safer.

Another resolution opposed merger of Fire Engine Company No. 10 with Truck Company No. 13, and a committee was appointed to take appropriate action. The committee included George J. Cleary, association president; N. G. Strecker and H. E. Shilling.

Opposition was expressed to the Tydings bill, which would extend free education to nonresidents of the District, and the traffic director was asked to have traffic lights on H street northeast, from Sixth to Twelfth street retimed. The association voted to urge again that the H street viaduct be repainted.

First and exclusive pictures of the sinking last September of the British Aircraft Carrier Courageous are reproduced here after a long delay by censorship restrictions.

Made by an unidentified officer aboard an unnamed rescue warship, these pictures record vividly for history Great Britain's first major naval casualty of the war. His Majesty's ship Courageous was sunk by a torpedo from a German U-boat on September 18 in the North Sea with a loss of 515 lives.

The pictures, finally passed by both the British Admiralty and the British censor, were received by transatlantic clipper mail.

Final Lunge—After being torpedoed by a German submarine in the North Atlantic, the Courageous heels over as she plunges into the deep with 515 lives. Seamen slide down her sides. Only one lifeboat has been lowered. No time for more

Unaware—Last plane to land on the Courageous glides to the deck as the mother ship steams on her way, not knowing that a submarine's periscope soon would be trained on her waiting for the moment to strike. This picture was made from the deck of another British Warship that took part in rescue work. Admiralty and censor withheld name of officer who made it

In the days of George Marshall's professional basketball ventures with his old Palace Club, which played its home games at the Arcade, a chunky, bow-legged kid was in the habit of sneaking into the games. On one of his bad nights, the kid was caught three times. His captor on each of these occasions was Ralph Fraser, Arcade manager.

Apparently tired of giving the kid the bum's rush, Fraser finally let him in. And the next week he gave the kid a job of distributing programs at the door. The kid was myself.

The programs were numbered, and at the intermission the management gave away a new basketball to the person who held the program with the lucky number. Well, the first night of my job, "by coincidence," my brother won the basketball with one of the many programs numbers I had given him. It is needless to say I held my job only a short time after that. My brother, however, was allowed to keep the ball.

A few days later I "borrowed" it to play with at the Powell school playground. The ball got a trifle scarred up, so the only thing for me to do was to get rid of it. I sold it for a buck and a half, and until today my brother has never known what happened to it. Well, brother, now you know.

But getting back to Fraser, known as "Monk" to thousands of bowling enthusiasts of the city. He is recognized as one of the ablest and most energetic alley managers around this sector. In his early youth he was one of the best baseball and football players ever developed on the local sandlots. He performed as a backfield star for the old Mohawks during the time rivalry ran high between them and the Apaches. "Monk" was fast on the gridiron.

'Monk' Was the 'Deacon of Swat'

He saw service with many sandlot nines, dividing his time between catching and the outfield, ofttimes filling in at first base. Some of the players performing with "Monk" in those days were Denny Sothern, later regular centerfielder of the National League Phillies; Walter Beall, who pitched for the Yankees, and "Tots" Long, who played with him in the minor leagues. In his sandlot days "Monk" was known as the "Deacon of Swat."

He played with three amateur championship teams in the District. They were the old Rosedale team, War Risk Insurance nine and Agriculture. The last two were in the Government League. It was his performance with the War Risk team that led him into professional baseball.

His first professional job as a ballplayer was with Frederick in the old Blue Ridge League. The league was a developer of many major league stars. Lou Blue, later first baseman for the Detroit Tigers and Chicago White Sox, got his start there, as did Paul Derringer a few years later.

The Giants Brought Him to Washington

In 1922 Fraser was seeing service in the East Carolina League. He was known as "Buck" or "Chick" and was the batting king of the league. No matter what position he played he proved the sparkplug of his leading Greenville Club. He batted around .375, besides being the star fielder of the league. The next year he was moved up to higher class ball.

In 1924 "Monk" played with Rutland and Quebec of the Quebec, Ontario, league where he also led the league in hitting. Most of the time he slugged well over .400 and finished with .417. His total bases for the 87 games also topped the loop, and he led in triples and home runs. "Monk" was third in fielding. He was termed the Ty Cobb of the league.

In the latter part of the season John McGraw signed him for the New York Giants on the recommendation of Scout Dick Kinsella. That year the Giants won the National League pennant and played Washington in the World Series. "Monk" roomed with Hack Wilson and came to think highly of John McGraw.

Ralph Had a Ready Helping Hand

"Although the late manager of the Giants was no angel on the playing field," Ralph says, "there never was a time that he wouldn't help the fellow who was down and out and really needed help. He did more real good than most of his rivals put together."

In all his triumphs as a ballplayer on the sandlots and later in professional ranks, Ralph never was the one to exploit his many achievements and was always, as he still is, a modest, retiring man.

Walter Haight tells a story of Ralph's earlier days. From the time that Ralph had been able to beat out a roller or skirt an end, his father would trail him to the game. "I had to follow him," said his father, "if I didn't he wouldn't tell me about them." Ralph would say, "we won," and then would relate what the score was or the side lights of the game. But he usually failed to tell his dad about the homers he got, or the long runs he made.

"Pop" Fraser is still Ralph's greatest admirer.

With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 31.—When he was a good, willing, plodding heavyweight, they used to dress Jack Renault in the uniform of a Northwest Mounted policemen, for publicity purposes, though it isn't likely that the French Canadian ever saw one of these darlings of the mid-twenties operettas.

CONSIDINE

Jack has a uniform today that is almost as colorful, with a French general's coat and a German field marshal's hat. Only it is sincere this time and nobody has come around to take a picture of him. He's the doorman at the Fourtieth and Broadway Longchamps. John B. Kennedy broadcasts from a skyscaping office a few doors down the street from Jack and sometimes the reformed journalist stands around and talks with the former fighter. He introduced us the other night.

"What th' ell," Jack shrugged, as he helped a party out of the revolving doors of the place with a solid left jab that spun the door. "It's a job, ain't it? There ain't many left.' '

The big, friendly, wide-faced old pug wasn't quite certain about how much he had made in the ring. "I guess maybe a hundred and twenty-five thousand, maybe hundred fifty thousand," he mused. "I had more than 200 fights. Fought 20 years. Long time to fight. Excuse me." He trotted in a military double-time to the curb, opened a cab door, and smiled properly at the two polite stews who emerged. He helped them through the doors.

Put Winnings In Real Estate

"I'd do it again," he said to us. "I mean I'd fight again. The only thing different I'd do is with my money. I never made what you call big dough . . . sometime 15,000, maybe 18,000, for a Garden fight. But what I done was put it in real estate. Bad. Put a lot of mortgages on my stuff, so I could get rid of it in a hurry. Then the depression come along . . . I been doing this three years," and he moved the big revolving doors back and forth a little, to get them just so—to keep the draft out of the restaurant.

"I'd like to be a little younger," he mooned. "Because . . . excuse me . . ." he did another double-time down to the curb and helped a party in a cab with a practiced sweep. "Because there isn't much around these days. Looie, and then who you got? Conn . . . He's skinny, and he can't hit. This Commiskey. I haven't seen him, but how can he be good and lose to Dudas? Maybe he needs coaching. . . . Some old guy around him. A lot of fighters need that, but they don't get it. Who made Looie? Blackburn.

"Looie's good. Real good. They only fallow I think has a chance with him is Tommy Farr. You laugh? Farr is the only guy—if he could hit. The fallow beats Looie will have to take it like Farr. Good. And hit back good. You hit Looie and he goes down . . . boom. But he gets up. He's got guts. He's young. When he gets older maybe he won't want to get up. That's what happens when you get old."

Battled Everyone But Dempsey

Renault never fought Dempsey, but he fought about everybody else: Tunney, Greb, Loughran, Fulton, Delaney and a lot of guys of the stripe of Arthur De Kuh, Pierre Charles and Gawge Godfrey. He doesn't believe any of them could have beaten Louis. And none of them would have hurt him, except perhaps Godfrey. "He hit good, that Godfrey. You don't hear much about he hit, but he hit good," Gen. Renault said, thoughtfully rubbing his muffin ear.

"Tunney and Louis would be a bum fight. They'd have the same idea," he said. "For they'd both counter-punch. Tunney never would lead. He'd let you lead, then he'd jump back and hit you, gone back. That's why he couldn't hit. Louis won't lead either, but it's different. He comes up to you and gets set and when you lead he just rolls and lets it go."

Renault looked in through the doors and saw a party about to emerge, ing stomach and brigadier doorman's braid, and poked the door with a He went up on his toes a little, gracefully for a man with his loom-solid left jab that spun it smartly.

"What a left I'm getting, doing this," he chuckled. "Too bad I'm too old. I could do all right, now."

Heelfly Is Winner; Seabiscuit Scratched

Withdrawal Greeted by Lusty Boos

Slippery Track Given As Reason; Experts Label Oval 'Fast;' Winner Pays $5

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Jan. 31.—In-again-out-again Seabiscuit stayed out again today, forced to postpone his comeback race because of a slippery track, and his rival of the past, Heelfly, went on to win the $2,000 added Santa Chiquita Handicap at Santa Anita Park.

Owner Charles S. Howard looked over the track after rain began falling during the fourth race, and withdrew Seabiscuit from what was to have been his first race since he broke down last February 14.

The week-day crowd, hoping to see the renewal of a duel that once sent them to a dead heat in the Laurel mile in 1937, booed lustily as the track loudspeaker reported the California favorite had been scratched.

Winner by Length

With the field reduced to five, Jockey Basil James piloted the 6-year-old Heelfly to the head of the pack after being outrun for the first three-quarters, and rolled on in to win by a length over Valdina Farm's Viscounty.

Hysterical, Heelfly's stablemate, finished third, with Bubbling Boy and Firozepore trailing in the rear.

"We hated to scratch 'Biscuit, but it was the only thing we could do," Howard said. "It isn't fair to the crowd, who put their money on him, or to the horse, to send him out when there is danger of reinjuring himself on a slippery track."

Turf observers labeled the track

Redskins Sign Player Named Kiss—Honest

Former South Carolina Gridman Recommended By Farkas, His Friend

If names mean anything, the Washington Redskins' newest player is in for a large amount of ribbing when he joins the team next August.

A 23-year-old, 215-pounder, the new recruit is known as Frank Kiss. Frank's contract was received yesterday from his home town of Toledo, Ohio, where he has played semipro football for the last two years.

Kiss is the second "new" player signed by the Skins for their 1940 campaign. His college playing days were spent at the University of South Carolina.

Not on the draft list, Kiss was recommended to Redskin officials by Andy Farkas, star back, who grew up with Frank in Toledo and played against him in high school. At Waite High School in Toledo, Kiss was All-City and All-State center for three years. His outstanding points in addition to his weight and 6-foot-3 heighth lie in his ability to back up the line and his competitive spirit. He is working in the Toledo glass works in the off-season.

A. A. U. Fails To Suspend 3 Trackmen

Travel Permit Case Unlikely to Come Up Before Next December

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 31.—The Metropolitan Assoication of the A. A. U. tonight backed down on threats to suspend three athletes for competing in the Prout memorial games at Boston last Saturday night without travel permits from the Met Association.

Charley Beetham, of Columbus, Ohio; Harold Cagle, of Shawnee, Okla., and Howard Borck, of New York, who run for the Sixty-ninth Regiment A. A., were the athletes threatened with suspension.

When the Metropolitan Association refused to grant them permits, their coach appealed to the National A. A. U., which went over the head of the district body and granted the athletes permission to attend the Boston meet.

President Patrick J. Kelly, of the Met Association said:

"They are not suspended, and will not be until the Metropolitan A. A. U. investigates fully the complexities of the National A. A. U., constitution to determine the Metropolitan Association's rights in the matter."

Apparently, the matter now cannot come up again before the National A. A. U. convention next December, and the three athletes are not in any danger of being barred from any of the New York meets controlled by the Met Association. There had been some doubt as to whether the Metropolitan body would permit them to compete in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden Saturday night.

Patty Berg Advances In Miami Golf Play

Betty Jameson, Shirley Ann Johnson, Marion Miley Also Double Victors; Mrs. L. G. Pray Loses in Third Flight

By the Associated Press

Coral Gables, Fla., Jan. 31.—Three of the Nation's top-ranking women golfers and an outsider, Shirley Ann Johnson, of Winnetka, Ill., survived two rounds of play today to reach the semifinals of the annual Miami-Biltmore women's championship.

Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, seeking her fifth straight victory in the local classic; Betty Jameson, of San Antonio, National champion, and Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., Curtis Cup star and former Southern champion, joined the blonde Illinois miss in the round of four.

Tomorrow's 18-hole matches will pit Berg against Miley and Jameson against Johnson, with the odds favoring a final between Jameson and Berg.

Shirley Ann supplied the surprise of the tournament with successive victories over Neoma Cupie, of Toledo, 4 and 2, and over Grace Amory, of Palm Beach, the tournament medalist, 2 and 1. Shirley-Ann's scoring was not on the spectacular side, but it sufficed.

Red haired Patty, playing in competition for the first time since recovering from an appendicitis operation, beat little Louise Suggs, of Atlanta, 4 and 3, with a magnificent burst of golf in the morning round. Then she recovered from a shaky start in the afternoon to eliminate Clara Callender, of Long Beach, Calif., 2 and 1.

Miss Jameson shot only fair golf in beating Mrs. Leon Solomon, of Memphis, 4 and 3, and had the battle of her life before she finally put the convincer on Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, 1 up.

Miss Miley beat Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., 2 and 1, and Mrs. William Hockenjos, of Lake Hopatcong, 3 and 2, to gain her place in the semifinals.

Betty Hicks, of Long Beach, who reached the semifinals of the last Nationals, was eliminated in the morning round by Mrs. Hockenjos on the nineteenth green, the only extra-hole match of the day.

Mrs. L. G. Pray, of the Manor Club in Washington, D. C., lost in the second round of the third flight to Mrs. Charles Sambrailo, Watsonville, Calif., 5 and 3.

Travis Fails To Sign After Seeing Griffith

Nats' President Moves On South; 'We're Only $500 Apart,' He Says

By the Associated Press

Charlotte, N. C., Jan. 31.—Cecil Travis and his white-haired boss, Clark Griffith, of the Washington Senators, couldn't agree today on the infielder's salary so they shook hands and said goodby.

TRAVIS

But, said Griffith, "We're only $500 apart. We'll get together."

Travis, highest salaried player in Washington last season, will be shifted from shortstop back to third base this year, according to Manager Bucky Harris' plans. Buddy Lewis, Travis' pal, leaves third base for the outfield.

Travis had hard going last year and had to take a cut. Griffith said the infielder thought he had been cut too much.

The Washington owner said that five other Nationals also have to agree to terms. Among them is Dutch Leonard, who was paid $1,000 as bonus for his 1939 play and who has been offered a boost of $3,750 this year. Dutch wants more. Others who haven't signed are Catchers Rick Ferrell and Angelo Giuliani, Infielder Buddy Meyer and Pitcher Almon Williams, rookie bought from Chattanooga.

Proposed salary terms were not disclosed.

Pajak Leads Last-Minute Hoya Attack

Army Ahead at Half; Georgetown Never More Than 5 Points Behind at West Point

By the Associated Press

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 31.—Georgetown University's basketball team defeated Army here this afternoon, 35 to 34, rallying in the last five minutes of play to nose out the Cadets.

George Pajak, who paced the Hoyas throughout the game, scored the winning basket two minutes before the game ended.

Army took the lead on Arky Vaughan's goal from under the basket. Pajak quickly tying the score with a set shot from behind the goal line. Dick Reinbold caged a one-hander for the Cadets, but Buddy O'Grady matched this for the Hoyas. However, goals by Vaughan, Alby Gillem, and Ernie White put the Cadets in the lead, and although the score was tied three more times in the period, the first half ended with Army leading, 19 to 18.

Army Sets Pace

Army started out with a rush in the second half, baskets by Reinbold and Vaughan increasing the Cadets' lead. However, the Hoyas never were more than 5 points behind, and when O'Grady chopped in two goals from under the basket with five minutes remaining, Georgetown was only 1 point behind. Army's defense tightened up at this point, but Pajak finally caged a long set shot to put the Hoyas in the lead for the first time.

Army increased the pace, fighting hard to regain the lead, and baskets by Fred 'Yeager and Vaughan on rapid-fire plays under the basket, seemed to have given them a commanding lead. However, Pajak again recovered a ball from scrimmage, caging it from under the backboard, and, with two minutes remaining, stole the ball from a scrimmage and dribbled it from the center line, scoring the winning goal with a one-hander.

Georgetown held on to the ball for the remainder of the half, with Army trying desperately to get possession. The Cadets had several shots during this period, but the Hoyas' defense rushed them successfully.

Virginia, Md. Court Game Is Postponed

Terps, Traveling by Auto, Are Forced to Pass Up Charlottesville

Maryland's scheduled basketball game with Virginia last night in Charlottesville was postponed until later in the season as the Maryland team was having difficulty with Virginia roads. The Terps, traveling in three autos, were completing a five-game trip through the Carolinas and Virginia.

The team reached Washington last night around 8 p. m. and Coach Burton Shipley explained they could have reached Charlottesville but the difficulty was getting here after the game. The team members are scheduled to register for the second semester this morning at College Park, and due to the condition of the road from the Virginia city here, the game was postponed.

The team left last Thursday and required 21 hours for the regular six-hour drive to Raleigh, N. C. They hit a 5 below zero temperature in Clemson and icy, snow-covered roads during the entire trip. The roads were cleared but stalled trucks and vans slowed their journey through Virginia.

Shipley explained that many of the Southern teams make trips through Maryland, Virginia and the Carolinas by automobile, as trains reach so few of the smaller cities.

Maryland won the first game from North Carolina State but comes back with three straight defeats on the ledger, to South Carolina, Duke and Clemson. The Virginia game was scheduled as the highlight of the week in the State as the Cavaliers boast 12 victories in 13 starts.

Duford New Pilot At St. Louis U.

St. Louis, Jan. 31 (AP).—Wilfred J. (Dukes) Duford, of St. Ambrose College, Davenport, Iowa, whose football teams have a nine-year record of 60 victories, seven ties and ten defeats, was appointed head coach at St. Louis University today.

His assistants at St. Ambrose, Robert G. Klenck and Don W. Geyer, also were named to the university's coaching staff.

Terms of Duford's contract were not disclosed, but it was understood to cover a long period.

Duford succeeds Cecil E. Muellerleile, whose resignation was announced January 13. Muellerleile's assistants, Carl J. Pike and Henry (Red) Krause, also have resigned.

Many Stings' Stretch Rush Wins Hialeah Grade 'A' Test

$10.50 Shot Triumphs in Field of Nine

Gridiron Is Second In 7-Furlong Race; Olympus Failure In First '40 Outing

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 31.—Many Stings, recently second to Sandy Boot in the Miami Beach Handicap, a fixture decided on the grass, carried the Lemar Stock Farm's silks to a length and a half triumph in the 7-furlong, Grade "A" handicap that headed today's card. Horses representing P. L. Kelley finished second and third. Gridiron headed his partner, Cardinalis, right at the finish. The favored Joe Schenck was edged out of the picture. Many Stings was a $10.50-for-$2 shot and reported in 1:23 2-5.

Nine went to the post, with all but Joe Schenck and Armor Bearer among the eligibles for the $50,000 Widener Challenge Cup of March 2.

Olympus Shows Little

Considerable interest was attached to the first winter showing of William Woodward's Olympus, which ran coupled with the Wheatley Stable's Sea Captain, another that was making his first start of the Florida season. Olympus, winner of the London Cup in England prior to being shipped here, was making his fourth appearance in this country. He scored his lone American victory last time out in the Bryan and O'Hara Memorial Handicap at Bowie, and many consider him a strong threat for the Widener Cup. The 5-year-old son of Gallant Fox obviously did not run his race today. He broke slowly, as did Sea Captain, and raced far below his true standard. Sea Captain was last and Olympus above that colt by five lengths.

COMO NO forced a swift pace from the start, shook off MOONLITE BOBBY entering the stretch and was ridden out smartly to the finish. MOONLITE BOBBY, in close attendance of the pace all the way, faltered in the final furlong, yet held LADY VAL safe. The latter improved her position while slipping through on the inside, but was in tight quarters through the stretch. LIMERICK closed a good gap.

ROYAL BLUE forced a steady pace, disposed of CREPE entering the stretch, then held away to the end under strong urging. MARFEU, nicely placed in the early stages, made a game effort when called upon and wore CREPE down in the last strides. CREPE obtained good speed, but faltered as if a trifle short in the stretch run. VISIGOTH, vigorously ridden, never threatened the leaders.

MANY STINGS slipped through between the leaders entering the stretch, assumed command through the stretch and won going away. GIRDIRON, going forwardly under light restraint, closed gamely to wear CARDINALIS down in the final drive. CARDINALIS, used up racing NAPPER TANDY into defeat, faltered when the final issue came. JOE SCHENCK, restrained in the early running, finished with a belated rush.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-half miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:02. Off 5:02¼. Winner, Mrs. S. B. Preece's ch. g. WISE WILL, slipping through on the inside all the way, opened up a commanding lead entering the stretch, but faltered and just lasted. ROOM SERVICE moved up steadily on the outside after leaving the backstretch, closed gamely and would have won in another stride. FOR ROMANCE, nearest in pursuit of the leader, weakened in the final eighth, yet was best of the others. WADE EARNER stopped badly after going a mile and a furlong.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:34½. Off at once. Winner, Superior Farm's b. f. MANAMAID held the field safe for speed and, rated in front, maintained her lead with determination. TRANSMITTER saved ground all the way and responded gamely to punishment to outlast GOSHEN. ## Bill Bennings

—At the Post

Selections at Hialeah Park

Dear Al:

That Seabiscuit-Santa Anita thing is approaching a racket. I mean that putting the big horse in the entries practically every other day and then scratching him. But that is nothing new with Seabiscuit's handlers. Remember when he was in the entries and scratched while that War Admiral controversy was going on at Laurel? The excuse is that track conditions changed. I always have wondered just how much Seabiscuit was "broken down." Ever since his present owner has had him, he has had a questionable knee. However, it did not bother him on off tracks. If Seabiscuit is ready to run, as they would have us believe, then why don't they start him regardless of track conditions. In the old days, Seabiscuit thrived on plenty of work on any track. If he is not ready to run, why put him in the entries at all? This is one of the reasons racing needs a "Judge Landis." I mean because trainers use actual races as a means of conditioning horses. Trainers will laugh at you if you bet when they start certain horses after a long lay-off. "Why that was just a conditioner," they say, after the race. The stewards and other turf officials will laugh along with him. The bigger the horse and the more prominent the owner, the more trainers get away with this "condition" stuff. I believe that when a horse goes to the post, he should go for the sole purpose of winning. Time and time again, John Public goes to the track, is attracted by the big-name horse, gets his bet down and then sees a miserable "easy effrot." If racing fails to stop this racket (and it's been going on for years) somebody is going to step in who will stop it. I have often thought of what would happen if hidden microphones were placed in the paddock to pick up the instructions given some of these topflight horses by these big shot trainers. They tapped the wires once on Jocky Don Meade. That case would be mild compared to the one those paddock wires would tell. For today, Confucius say: Honeyboo can make it two.

BILL.

First race—Honeyboo, a winner at the meeting, may be the right one in this vest-pocket field. Breaks off the rail and will have Alfred Robertson to do the booting. Looks like another spot. Blue Lily has shown plenty of foot and will draw plenty of play. Omission deserves money mention.

Second race—Paisey Begone has been rested since her last effort. Fits smuggly in this company and could be the right one. Corsica was turned loose last out at a longer route. This one may be a lot better than generally rated Cerisse III for the minor award.

Third race—Deep Summer gets a light assignment for this distance test and will do a lot of running. I'm going to string along in case there's a set of brackets. High Arch gets a feather assignment and is dangerous. Raphael for the show.

Fourth race—Boss Hoss, if turned loose, should gain the verdict in this field of maidens. The works say yes. Unravelled and Office Hour will be ready to battle it out if the stable continues to wait with the top one.

Fifth race—Dodger seems to have an edge over this kind and the appearance of Apprentice Flinchum will not hinder our cause. I'm going to be there. Stormy Passage will be ready for the best and is a threat. Dixie-Man for the minor money.

Sixth race—I'm going to try to make Roar win another one for the Benningites. He has the speed and needs only the right handling. We can't laugh off that recent smashing win of The Thrush. Bootless may go well at 7 furlongs.

Seventh race—Bailiwick failed us in a recent outing. This is another day and I look for a lot of improvement. Toney's Girl gets in with light weight and should be in the thick of the battle. Narise for the show.

Eighth race—Sun Apollo appears to be the class of this field. Eddie Arcaro will do the booting and I favor the combination. Star Mint is going to tie knots in a field one of these days at a long price. Cave Hill to take care of the others.

Best bet—Dodger.

St. John's, Gonzaga Battle Tonight for Catholic Prep Title

Old Rivalry Is Resumed At Tech Gym

Purple Basketers Seek Revenge Over Cadets; 4,000 Are Expected to Attend

One of the oldest and certainly the fiercest schoolboy rivalries in the city will get its first 1940 airing tonight at Tech gym, where the forces of St. John's and Gonzaga come to grips for the mythical Catholic Prep title. Activities will get under way at 7:30 with the junior varsities of the two clubs meeting.

As in most of its previous showings, the rivalry is expected to draw upward of 4,000 fans into the McKinley auditorium.

Precedent gives the Johnnies the edge, but comparative strength puts the Purple out front. Three years ago St. John's broke a death lock the Purple had taken on the series and since has managed for a tight grip of its own.

Now Gonzaga has its chance for revenge. It's smooth-functioning five has compiled a better record than St. John's and on paper figures to win by 10 points.

In the event Gonzaga does win, no one will be happier about it than young Freddy Rice, the Purple's ace forward and point maker. He's toiled for three fruitless years with the Purple, and has yet to see his team annex a series. The son of Catholic University's former cage coach is playing his last year for Gonzaga, a year he hopes will be topped by a victory over St. John's.

Lane O'Donnell, towering center, is also seeing his last Catholic prep action. Rice and O'Donnell have scored 130 points between them this year, more than half the team's total.

Against these two stars, St. John's will hurl the highest scorer in District schoolboy ranks, Frank Cady. The husky forward who also claims some distinction as a singer, has scored 146 points in his team's ten games, six of which were setbacks.

Joe Corrado will pair with Cady at forward for the Saints, Herbie Munhall will handle center, and the guard post will probably go to Dick Hathaway and Larry O'Brien.

Besides Rice and O'Donnell, the Gonzaga starting team will include Bob Mulvihill and Franny Counselman at guards, and Bob Rowzee at the other forward.

52-13 Heurich Game To Bantam-Press

"Tarzan" White, a sharp-shooting forward, stole the show for Bantam-Press last night as it routed Regal Clothiers in a second half Heurich Amateur Basketball League game at Heurich Gymnasium, 52 to 13.

White scored 12 times from scrimmage for a 24-point total.

United Typewriters led Federal Bureau of Investigation at the end of the first half, 33 to 14, but was extended to the utmost to score in the stretch, 46-39. Tipton and Noonan each scored 12 points for the locals.

The Jewish Community Center Big Five bested Q. and S. Laundry, 48 to 40.

Reis, Rookie Hurler, Signed by Yankees

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Tommy Reis, a promising rookie, who led the American Association pitchers in percentage of games won and lost at Kansas City, returned his signed contract to the New York Yankees today. He won 17 and lost 4 for the Blues.

Frank Johnson Now On S. C. Grid Staff

Lewis Shearer's Work Shows Harness-Making Isn't Lost Art After 52 Years of Plying Trade

72-Year-Old Man Remembers When District Had 33 Thriving Harness-Making Shops

By Anne Hagner

It's a far cry from the days when all of Washington went its way with only horse-drawn vehicles for transportation, but one by-product of the horse-and-buggy days still flourishes on the second floor of a hardware store in Georgetown.

The business? It's harness-making, which seems like an anachronism in these fast-moving days. However, its one remaining exponent, Lewis N. Shearer, is living proof that it is not a lost art as long as there is a wagon or plow left in the land. He is still plying his trade after 52 years at the same location, and he has no complaint to make about lack of work.

In contrast to the old days, when Shearer's establishment was one of 33 thriving harness-making shops in the city, the 72-year-old man now finds himself at the helm of what is practically a monopoly, for his only competitors are two saddlery stores that do a bit of harness repairing on the side.

Shearer, in his picturesque little shop above the hardware store owned by W. T. Weaver & Sons, is just as keen of eye and ear as he was when he migrated to Washington from his Frederick (Md.) home in April, 1888. When he first arrived at the Wisconsin avenue store, just north of M street, Georgetown, was the center of the town's business and residential activity, and the hardware tsore was owned by H. P. Gilbert. Eighteen months later, the Weaver family took the reins and conditions have remained virtually the same ever since.

True enough, where once Shearer had three helpers to take care of his long list of clients, now he does his work alone, sitting on a high stool and bending painstakingly over a bridle or collar. To the visitor, mounting the steep staircase leading to the harness shop, the picture of the stooped figure working away in his dimly-lighted room is reminiscent of an old English portrait. On all sides hang countless pieces of assorted leather, all pieces of harness brought for repair by farmers in outlying districts or by the surprisingly large number of concerns in the heart of town who still do their hauling with horses and wagons.

Residents of Georgetown, who can't remember a time when Shearer wasn't busily sewing and mending in the same place, say that he has changed very little in the 52 years that he has been working there. Very retiring, actually shy when he is around strangers, the old man cheerfully stitches and repairs all day long, with very little to say about the days when Washington society folk drove handsome teams of bob-tailed hackney ponies over the cobblestone streets, with much labor spent on polishing the elaborate brass-mounted harnesses that were the fad of the time.

"Business is good," he says, "though of course it doesn't compare with the days when the C. & O. Canal Co., would order from 80 to 100 sets of harness at a time. That's a lot of harness."

Chief among his other clients were the fire departments and the many other firms that used horses exclusively for their various businesses. Shearer worked for them all, and those who patronized him say that he was the best in town.

According to friends, who are much more eager to tell about him than he is himself, he has lived very quietly for the entire half-century that has intervened since he first came down from Frederick. For years his workroom has been the delight of the small fry of Georgetown, who have spent many hours watching his earnest labor over all sorts and kinds of leather.

Alnwick, G. U. Relay Runner, Faces Brother

Morty, Hoyas' Anchor, Opposes Gerald, of Manhattan, Saturday

Morty Alnwick, anchor man on Georgetown's mile relay team, and Gerald Alnwick, his brother who runs in the third spot on the Manhattan College four, will oppose in the Millrose games Saturday night in Madison Square Garden.

The brothers formerly raced on the Bishop Loughlan High School team in Brooklyn, and this will be their first meeting as opponents. Gerald runs third with Manhattan but he may be shifted in order to run in the anchor position against his brother.

Holy Cross will be the third team in the race. Manhattan's four holds a decision over the Crusaders. Georgetown scored in the recent Osceola games.

Coach Hap Hardell worked with the Hoyas yesterday on the outdoor track, despite the snow. George Tucknott, Kenneth Lyden and Vince Braun will run with Alnwick, while Charles Williams, Charles Neumeyer and John Motzenbecker are subs.

Maryland will be represented by a 2-mile relay team for the first time in the schools' history in the Millrose games, while Jim Kehoe will compete in the half-mile invitation. Mason Chronister, Alan Miller, Tommy Fields and Bob Condon are prospective starters in the relay.

Haas Rooting for Connie Mack, But Sees A's 'Years From Flag'

Long Time Between Pennants for Mack's Team, Says 'Mule'

By the Associated Press

West Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 31.—Much as he'd like to see his former boss turn the trick next season, George "Mule" Haas, member of the last championship team of the Philadelphia Athletics, thinks Connie Mack is a few years away from another pennant.

Haas, an outfielder with the championship Mack teams of the 1929-31 period, said he has great admiration for the venerable philadelphia manager's psychology, particularly with young players, but he thinks the $200,000 worth of new talent acquired by the Athletics will be "too green to be a pennant winner very soon."

"How is any new club going to stop the Yankees for the next few years?" he asked. "Boston might with a few new pitchers, but no new team can do it right away."

"Connie has a great way with youngsters, though," Haas said. "He really is the finest manager I have ever seen. He treats each player like a son, and respects each one the same way that he commands respect.

"If a player happens to pull a boner in the field he doesn't get bawled out when he returns to the bench. Mack may not say a word to him that day. Then the next day in the clubhouse he'll walk up, put his arm around that player and say, 'son, why'd you make that play that way?' Then he'll go on to tell how it should have been done."

Haas, who broke into the majors in the National League with Pittsburgh in 1925, went to Atlanta in the Southern Association in 1926 and 1927 and then went to the Athletics. He credits Mack with giving him his big chance by installing him in a regular position.

Cox Tackles Casey Tonight In Mat Feature

'International Night' At Arena; O'Toole, Austeri in Semifinal

It will be "international night" tonight at Turner's Arena when wrestlers of four nations converge upon the ring to do battle on the card featuring Joe Cox, who claims nothing more foreign than Kansas for his home, and Steve Casey, a son of old Erin.

The Irish strain will be continued by Tommy O'Toole, whose family is out of the County Cork. Tommy will hurl nasty looks at a newcomer from Italy, Jim Austeri, in the semifinal.

Don McIntyre, allegedly a new arrival from Scotland, will make his debut locally against Angelo Leone, New York Italian.

Don Evans and Lou Plummer, two honest-to-goodness Americans, will meet in a special bout, while Alan Eustace will tackle Jack Russell, another "new" face to Washington fans, in the other preliminary. Action begins at 8:30 p. m.

Blair Defeats Anacostia by 30-27 Margin

Montgomery Co. Five Always Ahead; Kelley, Reynolds Top Attack

Montgomery Blair High School courtmen led all the way in handing Anacostia a 30-to-27 defeat last night in the Silver Spring gymnasium, their second in as many starts over the interhigh fives.

The Blair team took a 7-4 lead at the first quarter and increased it to 18-12 at halftime. Anacostia cut a point off the margin in the third period and trailed 23-18 but the whistle cut short their final rally.

Ford Kelley and Wimpy Reynolds led the Blair attack with eight points each while Johnny Norris was one back with seven. Art Faircloth's nine points led the losers, whose nine foul shots were one-third of their total.

Western Jayvees Winners, 24 to 20

In a game that was undecided right up into the closing minutes, the Western High School junior varsity basketball team yesterday defeated Gonzaga Jayvees, 24-20, in the winners' gymnasium.

Western took a 14-to-12 lead at the half, and the second period was a neck and neck affair that saw Gonzaga, with only one substitution for the entire game, drop behind at the last. Western used two full teams.

Hot Time Promised By Riverside Owner

Eagles to Battle Port Colborne Club Tomorrow Night With New Heating Units Giving Fans Some Tropical Breezes

Tropical breezes will blow through the vast and frigid regions of Riverside stadium tomorrow night when the Washington Eagles play host to the Port Colborne Ice Hockey Club, of the Senior Ontario Hockey Association, in an Eastern Amateur League match at 8:30 o'clock.

Two large, hot-air heating units will be blowing warming breezes from each end of the stadium, Owner S. G. Leoffler announced last night.

Installation of the heating apparatus was begun Tuesday night and will be completed today with a form of "dress rehearsal" scheduled for tonight. Cold feet and frost-bitten ears will be eliminated, and fans will be able to shed overcoats in the stadium in the future, Leoffler claims.

In view of the number of hardy fans who turned out week after week in the sub-freezing temperatures, Eagles officials are predicting a doubling of attendance for the game with the Canadians.

The Port Colborne Club, coached and managed by the former New York Americans star, Bill Holmes, is the fourth team from the Dominion to visit Washington this year and will introduce one of the outstanding Canadian stars—Bobby Morrison—to Washington fans.

Two for Stewart

The Stewart Brothers Photographic five won a doubleheader last night, defeating the Brookland Merchants, 42-16, at the Washington Boys' Club and then moving over to Macfarland to down the Boys' Club there, 35-16.

Swim Meet Postponed

Buenos Aires, Jan. 31 (AP).—The final meet of the Pan-American swimming competition, scheduled for tonight, was postponed today because of a heavy rain.

London, Jan. 31 (AP).—The field for the Grand National Steeplechase at Aintree April 5 was reduced to 49 today when eight of the owners turned down the weights assigned their horses.

Heading the list of non-acceptors was Dorothy Paget's Roman Hackle, assigned 164 pounds, only five less than top weight given Mrs. Camille Evans' Royal Mail, 1937 winner, and Sir Francis Towle's Airgead Sios. ## A Screwy World; Hunters Now Try To Have No Deer

By the Associated Press

Hancock, Md., Jan. 31.—The Woodmont Rod and Gun Club would like to rid its preserve of 100 deer but the animals appeared content today to remain where they are.

Henry P. Bridges, secretary-treasurer, summoned about 25 members of the Tonoloway Rod and Gun Club for a deer roundup today, to turn the animals loose in Washington County because they were eating too much.

After much labor and yelling, 25 deer were herded toward the gate. There they changed their course and most dashed back to the Woodmont grounds. Only seven went through to freedom and probably slim rations.

Terp Frosh Beat G.W. High

Maryland freshman basketball team won its sixth game of the season yesterday by defeating George Washington High School five, 28 to 22, at the Ritchie Coliseum.

The game was closely contested throughout. The frosh held a 16-11 margin at half time. Its zone defense hampered the high school boys' scoring punch.

College Boxing In High Gear Here Saturday

the Cardinals and Explorers, who have never met before.

Maryland's all-day affair opens at 2:30 p. m. with the freshmen basket ball team meeting Baltimore Poly. The frosh boxers meet Virginia's yearlings at 4 p. m., and then the varsity Terrapins quintet entertain Johns Hopkins at 8 p. m.

The boxing matches will get under way about 9:15 p. m., with the Terrapins trying to even up the Virginia edge in victories. The Cavalier fighters have defeated Maryland twice, lost once and tied twice by scores of 4 to 4.

Virginia and Catholic University will be in the favorites' seats for their engagement, and the scene at Maryland and Columbus strongholds yesterday was one of harried activity.

Jim McNamara, the Explorers' coach, is seeking to juggle his line-up in order to utilize to the utmost Columbus' undeniable advantage in the four lighter divisions and at the same time find a man who might spring an upset in the heavier brackets and swing the tide the Explorers' way.

Maryland has lost to Catholic University and defeated Duke, while Virginia has defeated V. P. I. and North Carolina by lop-sided scores.

Dodgers Retain Yen for Veterans; Buy Tex Carleton

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 31.—The Brooklyn Dodgers, who drew some jibes recently by signing the veteran Wes Ferrell and who, from time to time, have taken on some of baseball's oldest men, tonight announced the purchase of 33-year-old Pitcher Tex Carleton from Milwaukee of the American Association.

Carleton helped the St. Louis Cardinals capture the National League pennant in 1934 by winning 16 games and the following season assisted the Chicago Cubs achieve the same goal.

100 Companies Net Advances 67% in Year

Railroad Showing Is Best So Far For Reporting Corporations

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 31.—Earnings of the first 100 companies to report for the full year 1939 were 67 per cent larger than in 1938, an Associated Press compilation disclosed today.

Large profits which piled up during the brief war boom of the final quarter helped boost the year's earnings of the group to $514,363,000 compared with $308,171,000 in 1938.

Excluding one of the group, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., net income of the remaining 99 amounted to $341,917,000, more than double the $155,634,000 earned the previous year.

The railroads made the most remarkable showing of the corporations reporting so far, as 21 carriers showed a net income of $68,645,000 against $6,018,000 in 1938. The fourth quarter—always a big one in the railroad business—was especially good in 1939 with the 21 roads reporting profits of $49,946,000 compared with $29,108,000 in the final three months of 1938.

Industrial Profits

Another noteworthy performance was turned in by 66 miscellaneous industrial enterprises which earned $221,804,000 compared with $102,777,000 the year before. Industrial profits in the fourth quarter felt the magic touch of the war boom as net income of 45 companies reporting for that period totaled $66,397,000, more than three times as much as the same companies earned during the fourth quarter business recovery in 1938.

Earnings of the industrial group were greatly lifted by the marked improvement in earnings of United States Steel and Bethlehem Steel corporations.

Eight public utilities showed a modest increase in annual net income from $43,857,000 in 1938 to $46,263,000 in 1939, a gian of approximately 10 per cent.

Four companies engaged in consumer financing and banking activities boosted their profits to $3,505,000 from $2,982,000 the previous year.

L. & N.-R. R. Sells Bond Issue to Morgan Stanley

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday without commenting on competitive bidding, authorized the Louisville & Nashville Railroad to issue $60,000,000 of collateral trust bonds in connection with the refinancing of outstanding bonds.

The bonds already have been sold to Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., Otis and Co., of Cleveland, and Halsey, Stuart and Co., of Chicago, through former Senator Robert Bulkley of Ohio, asked ICC officials to require competitive bidding on the issue.

The Louisville & Nashville will use the new bonds to refinance $60,000,000 of its unified 50-year 4 per cent gold mortgage bonds. It will pay off another $9,243,000 of these bonds with its own cash.

The railroad will sell $30,000,000 of 10-year collateral trust 3½ per cent bonds, due January 1, 1950, and $30,000,000 of 20-year collateral trust bonds, due January 1, 1960. The 10-year bonds will be sold at 99½ per cent of par and the 20-year bonds at 98½ per cent of par, plus accrued interest in each case. The average interest of both issues will be approximately 3.835 per cent.

It was estimated that the refinancing operation will result in a net saving of $9,922,040.

Bond sales for January totaled $145,078,150, face value, smallest since August's $111,394,000, comparing with December's $176,100,000 and the January, 1939, total of $159,611,000.

'Ghost Fleet' Bids Rejected by Board

The Maritime Commission announced yesterday that it had rejected all bids recently submitted for the purchase of four obsolete passenger vessels of its "ghost fleet." Reasons for the action were not given.

The vessels are the George Washington, Monticello, Mount Vernon and America, once luxurious liners which for years have been rusting at anchorage off Solomons Island, Md. The four vessels belonged to Germany before this country's entrance into the world war. Officials did not indicate whether the commission might ask for new bids.

LaGuardia to Rossi—Stick to Your Oranges

New York, Jan. 31 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, replying to a statement issued yesterday by the San Francisco Stock Exchange through Mayor Angelo Rossi protesting any reduction of the New York State stock transfer tax, today thus wired his Western colleague and friend.

"You stick to your artichokes and oranges, which we will buy, and let me keep the exchange and you buy your stocks and bonds through us."

"Fiorello."

The San Franciscans had attacked a move to modify the New York tax as an effort to increase the dominant financial position of New York.

Wheat Prices Decline After Early Rally

Closings are ⅜-¾ Cents Below Final Prices of Tuesday

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 31.—Wheat prices fluctuated uncertainly today and after gaining ⅝ cent dropped to as much as ⅞ cent under previous closing levels.

Early firmness due to moderate buying, some of which was credited to mills, lifted May contracts to 97⅝ and July to 94⅞, both up ⅝ cent. Lack of follow through buying and failure of Winnipeg to hold early gains, however, dropped prices, May falling to 96¼ and July to 93⅝. There was little news to influence the market in either direction and trade was light during most of the session.

Wheat closed ⅝@¾ lower, May 96½@96⅝, July 93⅞@97¾, corn ½@⅝ down, May 55⅞@55¾, July 55¾; oats, ⅛@¼ higher; rye, ⅞@1⅜ lower; soy beans, 2½ lower; lard, unchanged to 5 cents a hundredweight lower. Wheat at Kansas City finished ⅜@⅝ down; at Minneapolis, ¼@⅝ lower, and at Winnipeg, ⅛@¼ down.

Resumption of export business in United States what under the subsidy program recently reinstated on the Pacific Coast attracted attention. Sales of about 300,000 bushels to the Orient were reported made at a subsidy of about 30 cents a bushel.

Anacostia B'ldg. Becomes Member Of Local League

Admission of the Anacostia Building Association yesterday to be a member of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League brought the total number of groups composing the league to 23. The southeastern unit was accepted at the regular monthly meeting held at the Raleigh. Anacostia Building, established in 1924 is head by Albert Lindstrom with Frank M. Dent, vice president; James C. Wood, treasurer, and Walter B. Hartman, secretary. A member of the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation the association lists assets of $170,000.

Horace Russell, general counsel of the United States Savings and Loan League, and Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the body were guests at the luncheon yesterday. Bodfish paid high tribute to the record of achievement of the local league and said that the operation of the Washington associations reflected much credit to its directing personnel.

It was announced by Martin A. Cook, general chairman of the banquet committee that all committee chairmen are functioning successfully and the greatest turnout since the event was begun seven years ago is looked for. The dinner is slated for the Mayflower March 23.

According to F. Willson Camp, secretary assets of the members jumped $10,972,000 during 1939. At the same time reserves which were $8,600,000 on December 31, 1938 now stand at $10,175,000.

William N. Payne, jr., president acted as chairman.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Jan. 31 (AP). (U. S. Dept. Agr.)—Little domestic wool was moving in the Boston market today. Quotations were somewhat irregular, tending lower. Country-packed offerings of mixed three-eighths and quarter-blood bright fleece wools were quoted at 41 to 42 cents, in the grease, delivered to users, and very little demand was being received. Some graded combing quarter-blood territory wool was being offered at prices slightly under 75 cents, scoured basis, although a few houses were not willing to accept prices that low.

2 Mail Order Firm Sales Top Billion in Year

Sears, Roebuck And Montgomery Ward Do 3% of U. S. Retailing

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 31.—The wrold's two largest merchandise distributing organizations, Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., today closed a record-breaking fiscal year in which they sold more than $1,100,000,000 worth of goods.

This volume of sales, an increase of 19 per cent over that of the previous fiscal period, was equal to about 3 per cent of the total amount of United States retail trade in 1938.

By mail from branch houses located strategically throughout the Nation and through a vast network of retail stores these two organizations served as clearing houses for goods from countless manufacturers enroute to millions of consumers. They handled by far the largest volume of goods they have ever distributed in one year.

Indicating the rapid growth of this business, the more than billion-dollar 1939 trade represented an increase of 138 per cent, compared with the depression low of 1933; was 56 per cent larger than in 1929 and 908 per cent greater than in 1914. It was even 14 per cent larger than the previous record-breaking year of 1937.

Sears accounted for 70 per cent of the combined trade of the two concerns in 1914, but by 1929 this margin had been cut to 60 per cent, and in the past season Sears' business amounted to about 56 per cent of the total.

Seventy Years' Growth

The rise of these two organizations, based on what in the post-Civil War period was a revolutionary merchandising idea—selling by mail—spans a period of less than 70 years. Today's expanse of mail-order and retail stores is a far cry from the fourth-story, Room A, Montgomery Ward opened on Chicago's North Side in 1872, with one clerk and a capital of $2,400, or from the tiny mail-order watch business Dick Sears and A. C. Roebuck developed a few years later.

The men who direct these vast enterprises today attributed their recent business gains to improved economic conditions, which have helped to increase the number of customers as well as the buying power they possess. Reemployment and better prices for some farm products were factors. Aside from these things, however, Sears and Ward have gone after the business aggressively. An evidence of this is the expansion of retail outlets for their merchandise. The retail business has risen in the past few years to a position of as much or more importance than the widespread mail-order trade. Almost 1,200 stores now rival voluminous catalogues with which these companies blanket the country.

Cotton Yields 5 to 30 Cents A Bale at Close

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 31.—The cotton futures market took a fling at a higher price range today, didn't like it and settled back with net losses of 1 to 6 points.

Improved foreign markets pipe a seductive tune at the start. Prices were lifted as much as 50 cents a bale as Liverpool, Wall street and New Orleans interests studied the higher cables.

Later news from Bombay and Liverpool wasn't so cheerful. Reactions abroad discouraged local support. Selling increased, Bombay liquidating orders hit the ring and prices sagged.

Late in the day new liquidation was encouraged by shaky securities quotations and closing prices were near the bottom for the session.

Textile buyers remained indifferent in the face of a few second-hand offerings at slight concessions. Gray goods purchases were confined mostly to fill-in needs.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures coasted lower on a mild downgrade today. Final prices were off 2 to 3 points.

Of the total 108 contracts traded, 72 represented switching from nearby to forward deliveries. Expectations of another large increase in Chicago lard stocks kept demand below the simmering stage. Added depressants were price movements in lard and hogs.

March closed 6.77 bid; May, 6.89; July, 7.00; September, 7.07 bid.

Declining Volume Chills Wall Street; Stocks Continue Inanimate Trend; Bond Market Dull and Irregular

New York, Jan. 31.—The close of the first month of the new year gave Wall-street nothing to cheer about. Recapitulation of January's figures merely confirmed what everyone already knew, namely, that at the present rate of business below Fulton street it is questionable whether the Indians would consider taking the district back. Volume in stocks on the big board for the month was only 15,990,665 shares, the smallest for any January since 1922. In bonds the total of $144,917,000 was the smallest for any January since 1918. In other words, Wall street, geared to a 1940 tempo, has a 1920 volume of business, and you can't get harmony out of that.

The market today recorded another of tis long series of irregular declines. The composite average dropped away 0.12 point on a turnover of 610,210 shares. Most of those in the speculative lines in the financial district would derive a considerable satisfaction out of a blitzkrieg, for at least it would furnish something more interesting than the meaningless minor declines of the last few weeks. The trouble is that the stock market, inanimate though it is, has followed the policy of Nazi aggression, and its bit by bit progress on the downside has been similar to the bit by bit land seizing by Mr. Hitler. At no point has there been any one thing to cause a great upheaval.

Steels and Rails Firm

In today's trading there was a show of firmness in the lower grade rails, and the steels, utilities and metals tried valiantly to hold their own. The sum total, however, was another day in which fractional recessions predominated, in which there was absolutely nothing in business or political news to stir the slumbering bulls and in which the lambs of the street devoted their divided attention to the cats and dogs.

The list of active stocks showed that the cheaper ones took up most of the space on the tape. Most active was Continental Motors, which closed at 4⅛, followed by Seaboard Air Line, which can be had for 25 cents a share. As far as the stock market is concerned, it is not the lowest one-third that is being taken care of—it's the lowest tenth under the new order of things.

This may be the sine qua non sought by enlightened leaders of regulation, but the fact remains that there are still a lot of people who would like to see one of those old-fashioned markets when something selling above $10 a share would move a quarter point or so. We could stand a little of the something or other of the '20s if we could get anything in the '40s that was not led by such stocks as Continental Motors and Seaboard Air Line.

Difficulty Is Domestic

We cannot blame all of our troubles on European selling, and, in fact, the probability is that a major portion of our trouble with the stock market is strictly home-brewed. The recent figures on the amount of foreign selling of our securities shows that this factor has been an unimportant one in our market. The net reduction on foreign holdings of American stocks and bonds has been so small as to be negligible and the sum total of foreign holdings in this market is not stupendous. It is not foreign selling that has made the irregular decline of the last few weeks; it is domestic uncertainty on our own business and political outlook.

A few stocks broke enough out of the rut to close with declines of a point or more today. These included American Can, Chrysler and Harvester. Union Pacific was down nearly a point. United States Steel, following the failure of directors to declare a dividend on the common, was off a major fraction. Southern Railway was under pressure. There was fair support for Westinghouse.

Among the commodities there was a slight easing tendency. Wheat held to a narrow range. There was no follow-through after a brief upturn and the list turned downward, closing off ⅜ to ¾ cent a bushel. Cotton was off 1 to 6 points after following a course similar to that of the grains.

Bond Price Changes Narrow

Listed bonds were dull and irregular today, the changes being of little importance in any group. Highest rated investment media were idle, with small fractional variations in either direction. In the speculative department some buying developed among local traction obligations, while rails were mixed. Turnover in all bonds was $5,700,000.

Trading in Treasury issues reflected the comatose state which that market often assumes long before new financing announcements are due. Only small fractional changes were recorded. Louisville & Nashville bonds were slightly improved owing to settlement of the question of underwriting of the recent $60,000,000 flotation. Other leading corporate loans were well maintained.

The cheaper rails were uncertain, some bonds advancing fractionally while others were down. B.-M. T. bonds improved despite continuing uncertainty as to deposits under the unification program, and some interest developed also in Interborough issues. Some amusement bonds again did well, while share privilege obligations and other groups remained dull and virtually motionless.

Scandinavian bonds drifted lower in the foreign section, and Finland bonds dipped almost 2 points, owing to the Washington trend away from political loans. Belligerent country issues dipped, as the recent bellicose pronouncements do not increase confidence in eventual repayment. Latin-American dollar bonds were dull and irregular.

Swift & Co. Sees Steady Work, High Pay for Employes

Chicago, Jan. 31 (AP).—Continuation of steady employment and continued high wage scales during 1940 in the meat packing industry was forecast today by John Holmes, president of Swift and Company, in a business report issued to the company's 60,000 employes.

The company's 1939 earnings of $10,321,523 were 4.52 per cent return on the shareholders' investment of $250,112,408, Holmes' report showed. Eighty per cent of the hourly paid workers in the Swift plants had steady employment throughout the year and hourly wage rates, the report said, were 39 per cent higher, and average weekly earnings were 12 per cent higher than they were in the prosperity year of 1929.

"From an employment standpoint," he said, "there is a hopeful note for 1940 because even larger marketings of hogs are expected. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, federally inspected slaughter will increase to about 47,000,000 hogs, approximately the number marketed before the drought and the agricultural control program of 1933 and 1934."

Western Roads Report Big Gains For Last Year

St. Louis, Jan. 31 (AP).—Heartening increases in net operating revenues, looming out of the financial darkness like the powerful headlights of fast freight trains, have been reported for 1939 by three of the railroads headquartering in St. Louis.

The gains over 1938 were 237 per cent for the St. Louis-San Francisco (Frisco), 174 per cent for the Wabash and 31 per cent for the Missouri Pacific.

The Frisco, a Southwestern line, had net railway operating income for the year of $3,835,525, an increase of $2,700,351 over its 1938 figure of $1,135,174. J. M. Kurn, co-trustee of the Frisco, said the railroad's 1940 business, according to present indications, "bids fair to exceed that of the year just ended."

Net operating income for the Wabash in 1939 was $3,559,246, as compared with $1,297,490 for the preceding year, an increase of $2,261,756.

Boys Object To Girl Members In Their Club

The contemplated acceptance of girls into the hitherto sacrosanct male membership of the Washington Boys Club yesterday evoked protest among boy leaders.

Following the announcement applications of more than 100 young women had been tentatively accepted, a committee of ten club members registered immediate opposition with Director Charles M. Fyfe.

Only after a lengthy conference, in which Fyfe explained he favored the move as an experiment in social relations to be conducted for the "fun and unselfishness of it" did membership spokesman temporarily capitulate. It was specified the female invasions were to be permitted only at infrequent intervals.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Dr. H. A. M. contributes a hand on which he made three no trump through an end play. Here are the cards and bidding:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| | ♠ 10862♡ AK876◇ AK♣ K7 | |
| ♠ J3♡ 9543◇ J1094♣ J52 | NORTHWEST EASTSOUTH♠ AQ7♡ J10◇ Q876♣ 10964 | ♠ K954♡ Q2◇ 532♣ AQ83 |

The bidding:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | Pass | 2 NT | Pass |
| 3 NT | Pass | Pass | Pass |

"The opening lead is the four of diamonds. The ace wins, and a finesse is taken with the spade queen. The jack of hearts is then finessed and it loses. East returns a diamond and dummy's king wins. A spade is played back to the ace, catching the jack from West, and the queen of diamonds is cashed. West is thrown in with a spade, and after cashing two tricks in the suit has to lead a club to dummy's king so he cashes the ace first. The king of clubs and the ace, king of hearts account for declarer's remaining tricks. He makes three no trump, losing a heart, two spades and a club."

Historical Unit Offered Lord Fairfax Office

Special Dispatch to The Post

Berryville, Va., Jan. 31.—The old brick office in Greenway Court, historic Clarke County home of Lord Fairfax, has been offered to the county historical society for use as a museum. The offer was made by Miss Martha Kennerly of New York, present owner.

Old records show that Lord Fairfax and George Washington used the office to draft maps of large holdings in Fairfax County after young Washington had surveyed them.

Even the Buzzards Suffer

Leonardtown, Md., Jan. 31.—Turkey buzzards are being driven by hunger to seek food at the doorways of houses in Leonardtown. They eat with chickens in farm yards, tamely walking about and picking the grain.

Listen!

with Slocum

Eleven years ago Ellery Queen, radiogenic supersluth of the WJSV's air "adventures," was not even the germ of an idea. Today the gentleman detective is not only the matinee idol of millions of Columbia network listeners, but the hero of a score of mystery novels.

His amazing career started over the luncheon table a decade ago. Two cousins—Movie Publicist Manfred B. Lee and Advertising Agent Frederic Dannay—joked about an announcement of a contest to be held by a magazine and publishing company for a mystery story by an unknown writer.

Both were interested in problems in deduction. Tongue-in-cheek, they toyed with the idea of entering the contest. Finally they got up to their ears in possible plots and situations, and began spending their spare time together. Soon the project which had started as a lark became a finished manuscript—"The Roman Hat Mystery."

It was not a winner, but was published in book form in 1929—and Lee and Dannay were launched on a new career. Their initial effort was followed in 1930 with "The French Powder Mystery," in 1931 with "The Dutch Shoe Mystery."

That year they quit their jobs, both of which paid fairly good salaries, admits Lee—and turned to mystery writing in earnest. For the next two years the "deductive" assembly line turned out four books per annum—two by Ellery Queen, two by Barnaby Ross. And with their fictional sleuths, the prolific pals ran into all kinds of crazy situations.

Taking advantage of lecture-tour offers for Queen and Ross, they donned black domino masks and trouped across the country, Lee as Ellery Queen, Dannay as Barnaby Ross.

THE DRAGON'S TEETH
By ELLERY QUEEN

Chapter 19

"I'VE SEEN thousands like it before," retored Beau. "That's just the trouble."

"No, no, not a pencil. Don't you recall another writing implement of hard rubber composition, with a gold clip?".

"Cole's fountain pen?" Beau laughed shortly. "That's quite a deduction. Are you trying to tell me that, just because Cole's pen was hard black rubber stuff and had a gold clip, this pencil was part of Cole's pen-and-pencil set?"

"I'm trying to tell you exactly that," said Mr. Queen, "but not for the reason you give, although the similarity of construction and appearance are striking. Where are your eyes?"

He held the pencil up. Beau looked it over without touching it—from its leaded point, where Ellery was gripping it, up its body to the eraser-cap.

And just below the cap he saw something that made him exclaim. The hard rubber was considerably scratched and dented in a sort of arced pattern; some of the nicks were deep.

"Those nicks look like the ones in Cole's pen. . . . But that's impossible!"

"Disregarding philosophical considerations," said Mr. Queen with a certain excitement, "I think we may prove or disprove the theory by completely material means."

He laid the pencil carefully down on the rug between them and produced his wallet. From an inner pocket of the wallet he extracted a series of tiny squares of film.

"The microphotographs of the nicks in Cole's pen I asked you to take," he explained.

"But I thought they were in the office."

"Too valuable to be left lying about. I've been carrying them in my wallet ever since." Mr. Queen compared the photographs with the pencil on the rug. Then he handed the films to Beau.

When Beau looked up there was an expression of incredulity in his eyes. "The same!"

"Yes, the 'marks on this pencil and the marks on Cole's pen were created by the same agency. Consequently this pencil is a companion of Cole's pen."

"Cole's pencil," mumbled Beau. "Cole's."

"Without a doubt."

Beau got to his feet. Mr. Queen squatted on his hams Buddha-like, musing over the photographs and the pencil.

"But it can't be," Beau said.

"There's the evidence."

"But Cole's been dead for nearly three months! Unless the pencil's been lying here——"

"I explained before," replied Mr. Queen with a trace if impatience, "why that's probably not so. But if you insist on confirmation, run your hand over the rug and patch of flooring under the radiator and between the radiator and wall. You'll find it completely free of dust. Indicating that the rug and floor have been cleaned very recently. No, this pencil was dropped tonight by the person who shot Margo Cole."

"By Cole, I suppose?" Beau laughed shortly. "You'll be asking me to believe in the boogey man next!"

"There are other possibilities," murmured Mr. Queen. "But if you insist on being argumentative—why not by Cole?"

"What?" cried Beau.

"Well, why not?" Mr. Queen stared at his partner impassively. "What proof have we that Cole is dead?"

Beau looked groggy. "It's beyond me. Cole not dead?"

"I'm not asserting a fact; I'm posing a question. We have only one person's word for the alleged fact that Cole died—Edmund De Carlos'. Capt. Angus, the crew—everyone who could possibly substantiate De Carlos' story is gone. No body was produced—'buried at sea,' wasn't the report?"

"But . . ."

"Is the reason Cole hired us three months ago beginning to emerge? Has Cole been hanging around all this time under the cloak of the perfect disguise—death and burial?"

IT'S TRUE" muttered Beau, "that we wouldn't know him even if he were alive—no, that's not true. We did see him. In our office. So that doesn't wash. Then that would mean he's hiding out somewhere. But why?"

"I can think of at least two reason," replied Mr. Queen, "either of which is perfectly sensible and makes the theory very attractive—very."

"You mean you think Cole's behind the whole business—the attacks on Kerrie, the murder of Margo? Then why did he hire us in the first place? Or, if he's alive, where do the heirs fit in? Heirs can't inherit from a living man; if they do if that's what he planned . . ." Beau shouted: "I'm going nuts!"

Mr. Queen said nothing

"Wait! We're both crazy. Of course there's the simplest explanation! Cole is dead. This is his pencil, all right, but somebody else got hold of it and has been using it. Whoever that was is our man. Phew! For a few minutes there you had me going."

Mr. Queen still said nothing. He wrapped the pencil in his breast-pocket handkerchief and tucked it away. Then he rose.

"Here! What are you doing?" demanded Beau. "Hand over that pencil."

"I think not," said Mr. Queen, buttoning his coat.

"But it's our only evidence that someone was in this room. We've got to give it to your old man, Ellery."

"We shan't even tell him about it yet."

"But—for the love of Pete, why not?"

"The trail's a little too involved for the regular police mind," said Mr. Queen egotistically. "Acute as dad is. And we're not destroying evidence—we're merely suppressing it temporarily. By itself it means little; we've got to make it mean more. And handing it over to the police means inevitably publication of its discovery. We can't afford to warn off our man before all the cards are in our hands."

"But—Kerrie!" stormed Beau. "Where's the poor kid come in? At least that pencil establishes that someone was in this room tonight. To that extent it bolsters her story of the shots having come from this window."

Mr. Queen looked grave. "If I really thought the pencil would clear her, Beau, I'd tell dad myself. But it won't, and you know it won't. She's in a tight spot; the circumstances under which she was found are so damning by contrast with the tenuous reasoning from the pencil that she's bound to be held. Let her tell her story by all means, truthfully; exactly as it happened. Dad will examine this room and find"—he grinned—"a burnt matchstick and the ashes and butt of my cigarette. That's even better evidence than the pencil that the room was occupied tonight—the maid would certainly have removed those if they'd been present when she cleaned up."

"You mean we don't even tell him we've been in here?"

"He'll probably guess it," said Mr. Queen comfortably. "And then there's the light in here. But he can't prove it's my butt if we don't talk, can he?"

Beau stared at hm. "You'd doublecross yourself, I swear, if you thought some good would come of it!"

"Dad and I have been on opposite sides of the fence before," said Mr. Queen in a thoughtful way, "although I will admit this business tonight is in the nature of a dirty trick."

"My God! He's actually got a conscience!"

"So long, Beau. Let me know in the morning exactly what happened."

WHEN BEAU stepped past the detectives on guard in 1724 he found Kerrie gone from the sitting room and the door to the bedroom shut.

Inspector Queen was alone. He was seated in the armchair by the window, a sheaf of reports before him. The debris of flash-bulbs cluttered the floor.

The body of Margo Cole was gone.

"Where's Kerrie?" asked Beau, alarmed.

The inspector looked at him. "Why don't you stick around and find out?"

"Where is she?"

"In the bedroom in charge of the hotel doctor and a nurse. And one of my men. And a friend of hers, a Violet Day."

Beau blinked. "Vi! How did she get here?"

"Your wife kept calling for her, told us where Miss Day was stopping .. No, don't go in yet. I want to have a talk with you."

"But if Kerrie's sick . . . Let me see her for a minute!"

"She isn't sick; she just fainted. She's all right now."

Beau was silent. Then he said: "Did she talk?"

"You told her not to," said the old man dryly, "so she didn't. She must like you a lot, Beau, because she's in one big kettle of fish."

"She's in no spot she can't explain! Do you know who she is?"

"Sure. Kerrie Shawn. And the dead woman was her cousin, Margo Cole."

Beau sat down suddenly. "Look, pop. Let's not spar around. What have you got?"

The inspector sneezed over a pinch of snuff, and then regarded Beau unwinkingly. "Your wife's own admission establishes the fact that you weren't here when the Cole woman arrived. In fact, that you didn't get here till after the shooting. That lets you out for the record.

"Your wife was the only one in this room with Margo Cole—unless," said the inspector, "she can prdouce a third person. Point No. 1."

"She can produce me," said Beau quickly. "I tell you I was here. She said I wasn't because she didn't want to involve me."

Nothing doing. I've got a witness who saw you leave the hotel, Beau, and one who saw you come back. I know the exact times you went and returned. You couldn't have been in this room when it happened. The elevator boy who landed you on the seventeenth floor says he heard shots just as you stepped out of his elevator."

"I tell you——"

"No, not you, Beau," said the old man patiently. "Somebody else—if there is somebody else. But I'm pretty sure there wasn't."

"There was!"

"Who?"

Beau looked down. "I don't know—yet."

"I see." Inspector Queen paused. "Well, let's go on. Point number two: The house dick and O'Brien, manager of the hotel, both saw your wife holding the revolver which shot Margo Cole—holding it over the dead body. The house man says the barrel was still warm when he wrapped the gun in his handkerchief. Doc Prouty, who's been here and gone, dug one of the three bullets out of the body. The slug came from a .22. The revolver your wife was holding was a .22. I'm having comparison tests made downtown right now, but I'm pretty sure without the report that those slugs came from the same weapon."

"There were three bullets fired from the .22?"

"Yes. And, of course, your wife's fingerprints are on it, too And no others. That's point number three." The Inspector waited, but when Beau said nothing he went on. "Four: A quick check up with the pistol permit records has established that the .22 belongs to your wife."

"But it was stolen from her," protested Beau.

"Exactly when? Under what circumstances?"

Beau drooped. "Never mind. We can't prove when or where. She only missed it yesterday."

"Why didn't she report the theft?"

"She hasn't had time! She missed it yesterday, I tell you."

THE INSPECTOR shook his head "Thin, Beau. The picture looks—well, good. Her weapon, sole opportunity, caught red-handed a matter of minutes after the shooting, caught over the body with the proved weapon in her hand . . . The only thing we've got to fill in is motive."

"Yeah, motive," exclaimed Beau. "You say Kerrie killed Margo. Why should she?"

"Thatt's what I asked De Carlos."

Beau sprang to his feet. "You talked to that——Where is he? What did he have to say, the hairy ape?"

"I notified De Carlos and Goosens by telephone of the murder; they'll both be here soon. I asked De Carlos about a possible motive, and he was very helpful."

"I'll bet," growled Beau. "What did he say, damn him?"

"Oh, you don't like him? Why, several things. He said if you and Kerrie Shawn hadn't run off to be married tonight, he could think of a dandy motive. At Margo's death Kerrie would inherit the dead woman's share of the income from the Cole estate, you see."

Beau nodded gloomily.

"But, of course," continued the inspector, "he explained — and Goosens confirmed it when I asked him later—that Kerrie's marriage automatically cut her out of all participation in the estate—her own share as well as Margo's. So that motive is out."

"So what are you battin' about?" grumbled Beau.

"But he mentioned something," drawled the old man, "about some 'accidents' to your wife in the past few weeks which didn't quite come off—a horse that threw her and almost broke her neck, that little business in the garage last night . . ."

"What? What's that? What about it?"

"And then I had a little chat with Miss Day a few minutes ago," replied the inspector mildly. "And she told me they weren't accidents—something about nails having been loosened in the horse's foreshoe, and the locking of your wife in that garage having been deliberate, and something about some one having climbed into Miss Shawn's bedroom not long ago during the night for a little exercise with a knife—"

"That blabbermouth," said Beau hoarsely.

"And Miss Day also said it was both her opinion and Kerrie's that all those 'accidents' had been staged by Margo Cole."

Beau sat down again. "I don't get you." Then he rose.

No? Then I'll explain it to you." The inspector leaned back. "If your wife thought Margo Cole was trying to kill her—whether Margo Cole was or not, mind you!—then wouldn't it be natural for your wife to buy a gun—as she did—and wouldn't it be natural for her to shoot Margo Cole when Margo showed up in this room tonight and the two of them were alone? Yes, sir, that sounds like a motive to me."

It's an out, thought Beau desperately; a possible out. "Even if that's so," he shouted, "it's self-defense, isn't it?"

Trust Sponsors Profited 10%, SEC Reports

Investors, However, Lost 34% in Same Period on 900 Million

By the Associated Press

The Securities Commission said yesterday a study of fixed investment trusts had disclosed that investors sustained a capital loss of about 34 per cent between 1927 and 1935, while sponsors of fixed trusts had made gross profits of about 10 per cent.

The SEC disclosed its findings in a report to Congress on one phase of its extensive study of investment trusts and investment companies.

The survey indicated, the commission said, that the public had lost $302,000,000 on an investment of $900,000,000, while the sponsors made more than $90,000,000. During the nine-year period, six sponsors sold an aggregate of $759,000,000 of fixed trust shares or 87 per cent of the total.

(A fixed trust is one characterized by a fixed or nearly fixed list of securities in which investors acquire the beneficial ownership by purchasing certificates of the trust.)

Asserting that it had found "many sources of hidden profits to sponsors," the SEC declared:

"In fact the main source of revenue or profit to some sponsors came from the hidden charges rather than from the published loading charge."

The commission said that in addition to losses sustained as a result of the decline in security prices, loading charges and hidden charges, investors in fixed trust shares had sustained substatial losses due to "switches." This was described as inducing an investor to exchange his original fixed trust shares for shares in a newly formed fixed trust.

Miss Mollie to Stay On Job Till Eligible For Retirement Pay

By the Associated Press

The Nation's oldest postmaster in point of service, 81-year-old Mollie Stewart, of Oxford, Md., isn't going to retire for a little while, postoffice officials said yesterday.

Approximately 1,800 fourth-class postmasters retired at the close of business yesterday but Miss Stewart, who has served for nearly 63 years at Oxford, was not among them.

An official explained that Miss Stewart will not retire immediately because she failed to acquire classified status in 1911 when practically all fourth-class postmasters came under civil service. Because of this fact, it was said, Miss Stewart will not be eligible to retire on an annuity until after she has received a new appointment. This appointment will be made in the near future and Miss Stewart probably will retire in about a month.

Police Welcome Uninvited Guest On Free Ride

The station wagon that provides free transit service to First Precinct Station yesterday accommodated another uninvited passenger at John Marshall place and Pennsylvania avenue.

Summoned by Patrolman A. R. Newcomb, the wagon halted while Howard Parks, 34, of the 300 block of Ninth street was taken aboard.

Then, like an unvited passenger last week, a bystander, Walter Shellkit, 53, no fixed address, climbed aboard.

"Take me, too, I'm sick," Shellkit is reported to have said.

Marler, Once Envoy Here, Dies in Canada

Sir Herbert, Ill for Months, Conducted Duties Despite Health

Sir Herbert Marler, who served as Canada's Minister to this country for three years until illness forced his retirement last summer, died yesterday at 63 in the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal.

Sir Herbert had been ill since last January, but remained in charge of affairs until June. During the last month of his stay, he was confined to the legation, at 1746 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Late in June, he was flown to Montreal by special plane. His resignation was announced September 11, and shortly thereafter he was succeeded by Loring Christie.

His successor said yesterday he "received the news of Sir Herbert's death with the greatest regret."

"I know Sir Herbert's great public service, and his unfailing sense of public spirit," said Mr. Christie. "His death is very, very unfortunate."

Appointed to Washington after serving seven years as Canada's first Minister to Japan, Sir Herbert became known here as an efficient worker and an engaging speaker.

His diplomatic missions climaxed Sir Herbert's career as barrister, business administrator, lawmaker and cabinet member.

He was born March 7, 1876, the son of a McGill University law professor, and was a descendant of two of the oldest English families in Canada. He was graduated with honors from McGill, and for more than 30 years was associated with his father in the Montreal firm of W. de M. and H. M. Marler.

Sir Herbert was a member of the council of education of Quebec for several years. During the last year of the World War he was provincial fuel administrator. In 1921 he was elected to Parliament, and was made a minister without portfolio in Premier Mackenzie King's first government in 1925.

He was defeated in the general election in 1925. His appointment as minister to Japan in 1929 made him one of Canada's first diplomats when the Dominion started sending representatives to foreign capitals instead of depending on Britain for representation.

He continued to serve in Tokyo under the government of former Prime Minister Richard E. Bennett and was knighted for his services in 1935.

Berle Says U. S. Gold May Help Rebuild Shattered Europe

We May Have to Give It Away In Our Own Interest to Soothe Social Unrest After War, He Holds

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 31.—A free gift of some of America's accumulated gold and use of the resources of the Federal Reserve System to help reconstruct Europe after the war, were advanced as possibilities tonight by Adolf A. Berle, jr., Assistant Secretary of State.

When peace comes, he said, the United States will face heavy responsibilities for a return of the world to economic sanity.

Predicting as a "foregone conclusion" that the present war will be followed by "a great movement of social unrest," Berle told the political union of Yale University:

"It seems fantastic today to suggest handing over some of our accumulated gold as a free gift to reestablish international currency, to let other nations set their houses in order, and thereby reestablish trade and normal life. But this may not seem nearly so fantastic a few years hence.

"It seems impossible today to think of using the enormous and yet untapped resources of the Federal Reserve System as a means of rebuilding the shattered life of another continent; but when the time actually comes and we are faced with that contingency, we may find that the idea looks more like an immediate necessity than a fairy tale.

"It may even be—strange though it seem—that by dealing with some of these problems we shall learn at length that we hold the tools in our hand to remedy many of the injustices in our own social life."

He suggested that the United States might adopt the following methods of contributing to the "reconstruction of an ordered world:

"Sending goods which we produce in abundance to places where they are needed . . . paid for or not, human suffering must be relieved."

"Helping to set up a considerable part of the world in business again. We may do this because we should hope—and I think rightly—that the result will contribute to our own economic health."

"American and foreign public health units working side by side, and not trying to assess the race, wealth or origin of the people whom they endeavor to protect from disease."

"International lawyers endeavoring to resolve conflicts so as to reopen contact between groups and individuals."

"Transport pools designed primarily to assure that goods are promptly taken to the places where they are most needed."

"Banks and bankers pooling their resources so that the materials of life are once more everywhere available."
